AIRMEN 1ST CLASS DILLON J. AUDIT | 5TH BOMB WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

U.S. AIR FORCE PHOTO | AIRMAN 1ST CLASS DILLON J. AUDIT
Staff Sgt. Michael J. Solo, 5th Force Support Squadron NCOIC of the base honor guard, poses with his honor guardsmen at Minot Air Force Base, N.D., June 26, 2017. The honor guard attends many ceremonies, to include colors team sequences with both flags and rifles, funeral sequences, pallbearing, firing party, flag folding, sword cordons and other ceremonies.

MINOT AIR FORCE BASE, N.D. -- As he sat at the funeral, he watched intently as uniformed robots walked by his grandfather's casket. Focused on their crisp, mechanical movements he stared curiously as the Airmen paid their respects. Not knowing how to feel, he found himself overcome with a sense of purpose.

Staff Sgt. Michael J. Solo, 5th Force Support Squadron NCOIC of the base honor guard, was inspired to join the Air Force after seeing ceremonial guardsmen at his grandfather's funeral.

"Seeing them come out and do military funeral honors for him, I thought that was awesome, kind of like the culmination of his whole life in the Air Force," said Solo. "He did 20 years in the Air Force and didn't do a thing with it after that, and here at the end of his life, they're providing that military funeral honors. I thought that was awesome."

Solo eventually joined the Air Force and was assigned to the services flight at 5th Contracting Squadron at Minot Air Force Base, North Dakota. After talking to previous honor guardsmen, he decided to get involved and become an honor guardsman himself.

"I loved honor guard more than my current job," said Solo. "I definitely got a lot more attached to the mission of honor guard. I felt like I was having more of an impact than my primary career."

Whether it's at work or at home, honor guard Airmen practice constantly to perfect their craft. Solo was no exception.

"When I was a guardsmen, it was 90 percent practicing, so it becomes kind of redundant after a while," said Solo. "It's easy to lose over three weeks, so when I went back it was more and more practice."

The honor guard supports many on base ceremonies which includes colors team sequences with both flags and rifles, funeral sequences, pallbearing, firing party, flag folding, sword cordons, and other ceremonies.

Funerals are one of the most important ceremonies for honor guardsmen. They require a strong bearing, dedication and the Airmen's full attention while performing.

Solo said his first funeral was the first time he made a mistake while in honor guard. He and his fellow honor guardsmen had to re-fold the flag twice. Later that day Solo answered a call from the daughter of the deceased, and she was furious.

"I apologized profusely, but I was incredibly disappointed in myself and I wasn't sure I wanted to do honor guard anymore," said Solo. "It was enough of an impact on me to where I'm never going to screw that up again."

Despite feeling discouraged, Solo felt like honor guard was the only thing he wanted, so he pushed on. Remembering the sense of purpose he felt at his grandfather's funeral, he overcame his disheartening thoughts and continued to strive to be the best.

"Honor guard brings me back to the tradition and the military aspect of the Air Force," said Solo. "Working a desk job, contracting, phones, e-mails, computers, you start to get detached from the tradition and heritage of it. Getting to come into honor guard, it's like you're the face of the Air Force."

Continuing his career in the honor guard, Solo recently rose up the ranks and became the new NCOIC of the base honor guard, with hopes of eventually join the Air Force Honor Guard.

"I'd go there in a heartbeat," said Solo. "I would love to keep contributing, and continue to do honor guard in some way."

Dedicating yourself to a cause is important because it shows when you put your mind to something you believe in, you can make a difference. Whether it's big or small, it still matters. To this day, Solo feels pride, the exact feeling that was instilled in him the day of his grandfather's funeral.

Air Traffic Control: Eyes in the Sky

SENIOR AIRMAN SAHARA L. FALES | MINOT AIR FORCE BASE PUBLIC AFFAIRS

MINOT AIR FORCE BASE, N.D. -- "When I was first notified of the emergency, it was an, 'Are you serious?' moment. I couldn't believe it," said Staff Sgt. Wolfgang Jubell, 5th Operations Support Squadron air traffic controller. "We immediately notified the Fire Department, Air Field Management, hospital and other base agencies with all the information on the aircraft. There was constant communication between us all."

During any in-flight emergency, it's an air traffic controller's responsibility to get the aircraft safely on the ground by clearing the airspace, communicating with the aircrew and ensuring emergency personnel are prepared to meet the aircraft when it lands.

"Once the pilots informed us that the aircraft was structurally sound and everyone was okay, a lot of weight was lifted off our shoulders," said Jubell. "I just wiped the sweat off my brow and we proceeded to get the aircraft back on the ground."

Communication plays a major role in ensuring that aircraft return safely. In the event that communication systems stop working, air traffic controllers have alternative ways of letting aircraft know when it's safe to land.

"If there is only one-way radio communication, we have a light gun we can use. Different colors and patterns to tell them what to do," said Senior Airman Jalah Patten, 5th OSS air traffic control journeyman. "The aircrew can also signal us back by rocking their wings or doing other motions."

Additionally, air traffic controllers always work with at least two other Airmen or a watch supervisor who can provide their experience whenever needed.

"We have a lot of Airmen who come from other bases and have experience with other aircraft," said Jubell. "Each aircraft has different characteristics and abilities; those abilities will dictate how you can work them."

From the moment air traffic control Airmen arrive at technical school, they are taught air traffic control principles and procedures so they are prepared for any possible situation.

"Tech school is very intense and mentally demanding; I believe this helps Airmen cope with the stress the job can cause," said Tech. Sgt. Nathan Jeter, 5th OSS assistant chief controller.

"It's more intimidating once you get to your first duty station because the people you hear over the headset are real," added Patten.

Along with their extensive technical school training, air traffic control Airmen are required to complete their Control Tower Operator Certification and train on the simulator to prepare for any situation that may arise.

"In training I teach them the basics, then once we get further along in training I try to help them develop their own technique on how to handle operations," said Jubell. "We can't possibly teach them everything that could happen, but we do have a lot of checklists in place to help guide them through a majority of scenarios."

Although the job can be challenging, Patten enjoys seeing the immediate effects his role has on aircraft and aircrew when they return.

"My favorite part of the job is the experience," said Patten. "It's a cool experience to see the jets take off and come back, and to know that I helped these guys get home safe to their families."

Changes to North Dakota's Child Passenger Safety Law Effective August 1, 2017 More Children Will Be Required To Ride in a Car Seat or Booster Seat

NORTH DAKOTA DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

BISMARCK, N.D. – More children in North Dakota soon will be riding safely because of changes in the state's child passenger safety law. Effective August 1, children younger than eight years of age will be required to ride in a child restraint (car seat or booster seat) unless they are 4'9" tall or greater. The restraints must be used correctly – following the manufacturer's instructions. Children ages eight through 17 must be properly secured in a seat belt (or restraint, if needed). The law carries a penalty of $25 and one point against the driver's license.

According to Dawn Mayer, director of the North Dakota Department of Health (NDDoH) Child Passenger Safety Program, "This revision basically extends the time a child is required to ride in a child restraint (car seat or booster seat) by one year." Child restraints offer more protection for children than just seat belts. Most children at age seven should be riding in a booster seat with a lap and shoulder belt because they are not tall enough to ride in a seat belt.

Booster seats are belt positioning devices that help position the lap and shoulder belt safely across a child's body – low on the hips and centered across the chest. It is required to use both the lap and shoulder seat belt when using a booster seat.

Booster seats come in two general types – backless boosters and high-back boosters. High-back boosters are recommended if the vehicle seatback does not offer head protection (meaning the vehicle seat back is lower than passenger's ears).

The NDDoH recommends all children younger than 13 years ride in the back seat. Follow these best practices when it comes to transporting children of all sizes:

Rear-Facing: Children should ride rear-facing until at least two years of age (following car seat instructions) or until the upper size limits of the car seat.

Forward-Facing: When children are at least two years of age or have outgrown the highest rear-facing size limits of their car seat, they may ride forward-facing in a car seat with a harness. Use the seat until the child reaches the harness's highest size limit allowed by the manufacturer.

Boosters: When children have outgrown the harness in their forward-facing car seat, they may utilize a booster seat. Children should be at least 40 pounds and at least four years of age. Keep children in boosters until about 4'9" tall.

Seat Belt: When children have outgrown their booster seat, they may use a seat belt when it fits over their body correctly. For a seat belt to fit properly, the lap belt must lie snugly across the upper thighs and be centered across the shoulder and chest. It should not lie on the stomach or across the neck.

A fact sheet for the public explaining the revised law and child passenger best practices for transporting children is available on the Department of Health's website at ndhealth.gov/injuryprevention/childpassenger.

For more information, contact Dawn Mayer with the North Dakota Department of Health at 701.328.4536 or 800.472.2286.

PRAIRIE ADVENTURES

BY PATRICIA STOCKDILL

"It's definitely a nice of anglers (fishing for catfish)...once people eat them, they'll go back to them."

– Scott Hobbs, Scott's Bait and Tackle, Pick City discussing fishing for catfish in the Missouri River tailrace.

Admittedly, they probably missed out in the "handsome" category when it comes to fish. They probably don't even fit in the "cute" category.

After all, channel catfish calling the Missouri River tailrace home – or any channel catfish for that matter – lack the glittery greenish-gold of walleye, the cute bluegill and crappie physique, and well, possibly remind folks of the lowly bullhead.

They have this big mouth...really big mouth.

And whiskers – four of them, in fact.

And they're kind of a gray-brown – not exactly eye-catching.

Some anglers may remember when bullheads and other native species were highly sought after among North Dakota anglers. However, that was before Garrison Dam and Valley City National Fish hatcheries and a N.D. Game and Fish Department fish-stocking program that elevated walleye to near god-like status.

Since then, pike, sauger, bullheads, and even channel catfish just don't have the glitz and glamour that comes with walleye fishing. Oh, some anglers haven't forgotten them and even seek them out.

Yet, channel catfish seriously lack angler love. They get a little love from some folks who treasure fishing for them on the Red River. For the true catfish angler, the Red River has a hefty reputation and catch-and-release is hugely popular.

Channel catfish even get a little love from a few folks who know the secrets to their whereabouts on the Little Missouri River, the upper end of Lake Sakakawea, and maybe even Lake Oahe.

Thankfully, there is also a steady niche of anglers who have catfish love for those calling the Missouri River tailrace home.

Scott's Bait and Tackle owner Scott Hobbs sees many of the anglers who make up that niche of catfish anglers in his Pick City store. Anglers in the tailrace typically catch nice, eater-sized catfish in that 1- to 3-pound range, he described, as they work the chutes from boats.

Or they may find them from the wing walls, although that's usually at night.

The presentations used when targeting catfish aren't that much different than looking for The King – walleye: Hobbs suggested vertical drifting with smelt or nightcrawlers – or any typical walleye rigging. "You're usually in fast water (tailrace chutes or immediately downstream)," he described.

With most fish less than 5 pounds in the tailrace, one's line weight really doesn't matter – anything from 8-pound up to 16-pound test line, he said.

One trick Hobbs offered that could make a difference in keeping or releasing a catfish is the size of hook. "I would suggest bigger hooks, a No. 2 or larger," he explained. The reason is removing the hook from the mouth of the catfish.

When the hook is too small, it's more difficult to get the hook easily out.

It's hard to say why channel catfish don't get much love. Maybe it is their appearance. Maybe it's because they're not named 'walleye.'

But Hobbs has a suggestion – head to the tailrace and try to catch a few of those nice eater-sized tailrace catfish.

Cook them up.

While they'll likely never attain the popularity channel catfish enjoy in southern states and most certainly could never topple King Walleye from its perch on Top of the Hill, Hobbs feels that once people eat catfish they will fish for them more.

Maybe they can get the angler love the native fish deserves.

'HOMECOMING' KING

NEIL POND

Of all the comic-book superheroes, Spider-Man was always the one that always connected most directly to me as a kid.

Mainly because he was a kid, too—unlike Superman, Batman, Daredevil, Thor, the Hulk and just about everyone else. They were all bona fide adults with day jobs, or at least grown-up lives and responsibilities.

Spider-Man's alter ego, Peter Parker, was an insecure, misunderstood high school student, a teenager who juggled classes, crime-fighting and mad crushes on Mary Jane Watson and Gwen Stacy.

I could dig that. More than 50 years after his first appearance in a Marvel Comic, and now after three big-screen movies starring Tobey McGuire and two with Andrew Garfield, Spider-Man: Homecoming returns the character to the hormones and high-school hallways of his roots.

And it marks the full-blown debut of a new Spider-Man, Tom Holland, and he crushes it. The young British actor, 21, has appeared in several other films, including In The Heart of the Sea and The Lost City of Z, and he was one of the kids swept away by the tsunami with Naomi Watts in The Impossible. But he rocks Spider-Man as if this was the role he's been waiting in the wings to play all along.

He gave a teaser cameo appearance as Spidey in last year's Captain America: Civil War, and the movie creatively begins with Peter's "home video" leading up to his experience in that film's "clash of the Avengers" tarmac scene.

Do we need yet another Spider-Man movie? Heck yeah—if it's this one, a rollicking, soaring glide of a ride that puts a bright new, fun, feisty, re-energized spin on pop culture's top web star.

Although it's officially a franchise reboot, Spider-Man: Homecoming dispenses (thankfully) with much of the backstory—how Peter Parker became an orphan, how he became Spider-Man—and gets right down to business. In the opening scene, we meet the character who'll become Spidey's next nemesis: Adrian Toomes (Michael Keaton), the owner of a New York salvage company who exacts revenge on the circumstances—and bureaucrats—that screwed him out a big job, spurring him to a life of crime as the Vulture.

Using a high-tech winged harness that allows him to fly, Toomes uses giz-mology stolen from superhero smack-down sites to create guns that can obliterate people and buildings. That's bad news for just about everyone, except bad guys who'll pay him big bucks for the black-market bang.

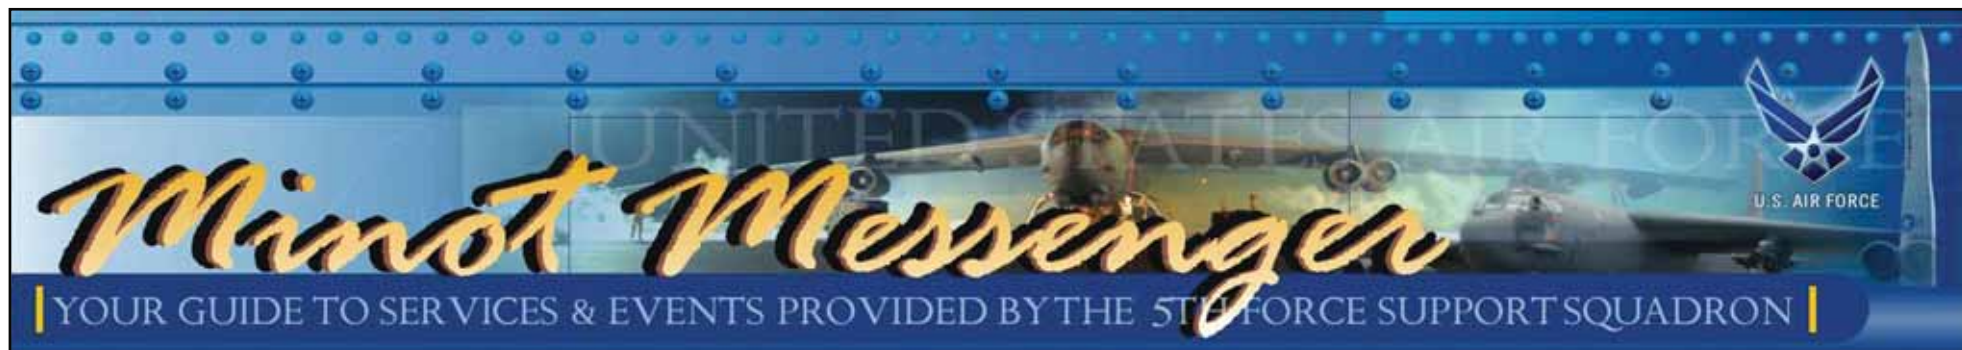

There are several delightful surprises, and one huge one, so the less said about certain things, the better.

Yes, Stan Lee makes a cameo. Robert Downey Jr. pops in and out as Tony Stark, who provides Peter Parker with his righteously upgraded Spidey suit. The scene in which Peter discovers, and activates, the suit's Siri-like personal-assistant is simply terrific.

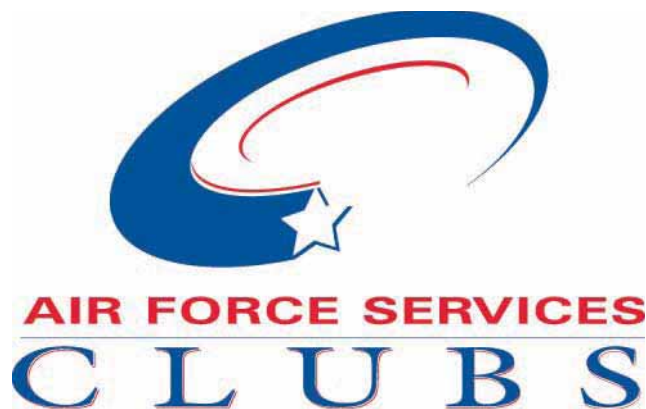

When Spider-Man hesitates at the top of a the Washington Monument, during a boffo rescue scene a bit later, the personal assistant in his suit asks him why he's pausing, some 550 feet off the plaza below.

His response: "I've never been this high before."

Air Force Implements Revolutionary Change To Club Membership

The Air Force is revolutionizing its club membership program in the coming months, to include a transition away from the club credit card to the AF Club Membership portal.

"Many people told us that they wanted to become a part of their Air Force clubs and the culture that surrounds membership, but declined because of the credit card requirement," said Jonathan Boyd, Air Force Services Activity chief of nonappropriated fund food and beverage operations.

"We've changed the way to Air Force Club membership and much more with this new portal. We're very excited to roll out this new capability to our current members and offer it to all of our active-duty force, retirees and Department of Defense civilians," said Jeff Polangin, 5th Force Support Squadron Food and Beverage Operations Director.

The Air Force Services Activity (AFSVA) has partnered with MemberPlanet to manage the Air Force Club Membership portal through a web site, as well as develop a mobile application for personal electronic devices.

"The beauty of the Club Membership Portal is that members can now choose to use their top of the wallet credit or debit card to pay for membership dues," Polangin said. In addition to more freedom with dues payment methods, members will be better informed about club programs and events in "real time" through the web portal and mobile application.

"Through our membership portal, club members can find out what events are happening at their club," said Boyd. "We're also looking to expand the membership portal to provide our members with information pertaining to other installation services facilities and products."

The new AF Club Membership Portal will be rolled out across the Air Force 1 Aug.

"Air Force club membership is a tradition," said Col. Donna Turner, AFSVA commander. "It's where our Airmen experience, learn, and share our Air Force culture. Our clubs provide resiliency to our Airmen and their families. This new approach to club membership will make it easier for our Airmen to stay connected with the tradition and build on the AF culture and esprit de corps established by those who have served before."

For more information on the new Air Force Clubs Membership portal, stop by Rockers Bar & Grill or the Jimmy Doolittle Center or go to your Force Support Squadron's website at <https://5thforcesupport.com>.

Chicken Ranch Wraps

INGREDIENTS:

2 cups cooked grilled chicken breasts, chopped (seasoned with your favorite spices, see note*)
 1/4 cup Hidden Valley® Simply Ranch dressing
 1/2 cup mozzarella cheese
 1/4 cup cilantro, minced (optional)
 4 8" tortillas

INSTRUCTIONS:

Lay tortillas on a clean flat surface. Place about 1/2 cup chicken, 1 tablespoon ranch, 2 tablespoons of cheese, and 1 tablespoon of minced cilantro on each tortilla. Fold tightly to form a burrito shape.

Heat a heavy-duty pan or grill to medium heat. Coat with a light layer of oil or cooking spray and cook wraps for 1-2 minutes on each side or until the tortilla is crispy and golden. Remove from heat, slice in half and serve immediately.

Notes

*For the chicken: You can use cooked rotisserie chicken, leftover chicken, or grilled chicken seasoned with your favorite spices. I like to season my chicken with a tablespoon of fajita seasoning and grill in a hot pan for 5-6 minutes per side or until cooked through.
