SENIOR AIRMAN APRYL HALL | MINOT AIR FORCE BASE PUBLIC AFFAIRS

MINOT AIR FORCE BASE, N.D. -- Dirt flies, muscles throb and lungs burn. The chase is on as he pushes himself to the limits. He is so close, yet feels so far away. Forcing every last ounce of energy out, he closes the gap on the familiar figure in front of him. Closer and closer, inch-by-inch as the distance diminishes over every second. Closer and closer still...

Second Lt. William Yau, 742nd Missile Squadron deputy missile combat crew commander, has been admiringly chasing his older brother James since they were young boys growing up in Troy, Michigan.

"We were always super close," said James, a first lieutenant who is also a deputy MCCC assigned to the 742nd MS. "Ever since we were kids, we constantly hung out or did sports together. It was always a good time."

From a young age, military service was part of who they were. Their grandfather served in the Taiwanese Air Force and their father in the Taiwanese Army Air Corps. They often played toy soldiers and admitted serving in the Air Force was always in the back of their minds.

"For me, I always wanted to be the first guy in the family to serve in the U.S. Air Force," James said. "I just wanted to give back and felt that drive to serve. We bled blue."

James worked hard to attend his dream college, the University of Michigan, and joined the Reserve Officers' Training Corps to learn more about opportunities in the Air Force. Meanwhile, as a junior in high school, William focused on making all-state on the cross country team, something his older brother wasn't able to accomplish during his time at Troy High School.

"He finally got it in his senior year," James said, proudly. "He wanted it so bad!"

Following in James' footsteps, William was accepted to the University of Michigan and quickly got involved in the ROTC program.

"For me, it was more so his guidance and mentorship that got me involved," William said. "He told me there was an opportunity to pursue an education and make an impact on, not only my life, but the world.”

While in college and ROTC together, James and William made sure to see each other every day and remained close. James even made it a point to keep an eye out for his brother, keeping them both on a path to success.

“He made sure I focused on academics and ROTC,” William said. “It was good to have him there.”

Time flew and soon James was headed to Vandenberg Air Force Base, California for his training to become a missile operator. Watching his older brother move on again, William worked hard to outdo him for a second time.

“He put his sole focus in ROTC and climbed all the way to the top of the chain of command,” James said. “He actually became the detachment commander, something I couldn’t do.”

Despite this accomplishment, William still looked up to his older brother and set his sights on the missile career field.

“James’ guidance impacted how I set up my job choices,” William admitted. “When I got my 13N selection, I was really excited.”

By the time William reached Vandenberg AFB for his job training, James had already moved on to his first duty station at Minot AFB, North Dakota. But, for William, it still felt like his older brother was within grasp. He often called James for advice with school or questions about the operational career field.

“I was able to live vicariously through my little brother and guide him through Vandenberg,” James said. “In hindsight, I would have told the younger version of me how important this job is and how much responsibility I’d have. I was able to do that with Will.”

When the time came for William to get his first duty assignment, he hoped for Minot.

“I wanted to have a family member nearby, and I also took into consideration our other family members,” William said. “If I was at Minot too and our parents wanted to come visit us, they wouldn’t have to go to two different states.”

When James’ commander approached him asking if there would be issues working with his younger brother, James assured him they were close and it would be good for both of them. William was on his way to Minot shortly after.

William, who has been on station for just over two months, now lives with his brother. When the two aren’t at missile alert facilities manning the 91st Missile Wing’s intercontinental ballistic missile fleet, they are out pushing each other on long runs, just like when they were kids.

“James is probably my best friend,” William said. “I’m always going to be observing him as time progresses, but I think it’s more about him providing guidance here and there and me making my own decisions.”

James said he is okay with that. In fact, he wants his younger brother to not only learn from him, but be better.

“Even though he’s walking through the same footsteps, looking back on him, I feel like he does everything better than I do,” James said. “It makes me feel really good and forces me to work a little bit harder. And hopefully he does something similar here where he’s able to outshine me by observing what I do.”

With a grin spread across his face, William agreed whole-heartedly.

“We definitely push each other in whatever we do,” he said. “He’s always been faster than me, but knowing I’m right there behind him pushes him a little bit harder. For me, it just gives me something to chase.”

And that’s what William continues to do: chase, push, and strive for that day when there are no more distances between them. A day when they are side-by-side, stride-for-stride. As brothers who have made each other better every day of their lives.

From left: 1st Lt. James Yau and 2nd Lt. William Yau, 742nd Missile Squadron deputy missile combat crew commanders, stand next to each other at Minot Air Force Base, N.D., July 28, 2017. William Yau has looked up to his older brother as a mentor his entire life, and has followed his footsteps through high school, college and now the U.S. Air Force.

MINOT AIR FORCE BASE, N.D. --

Many states offer active-duty military members special hunting and fishing opportunities and discounted fees. However, as members move across the nation, it can be challenging to know the local laws. It's important for members stationed at Minot Air Force Base comply with North Dakota's laws and policies, so they can take full advantage of the opportunities available. To determine if you are a N.D. resident, you must have a physical address in N.D. that you have resided at for at least six months, and a N.D. driver's license. If you do not have both, you are considered a non-resident.

Only the best come north

AIRMAN 1ST CLASS JONATHAN MCELDERRY
MINOT AIR FORCE BASE PUBLIC AFFAIRS

MINOT AIR FORCE BASE, N.D. -- I was born in Georgia and raised in Alabama, known for their southern hospitality, long summers and moderate winters.

Needless to say, I'd never been this far north so I didn't know what I was getting myself into when I learned I was coming to Minot, North Dakota.

It wasn't long before I heard about Minot Air Force Base's negative stereotype. When I told people I got orders here, all I heard was how "bad" it was going to be. Some even considered it to be the worst base in the Air Force.

Every time I asked if they had ever been here, the answers were always the same, "no".

I wondered how someone could have an opinion of a place they've never even been to. I was determined to not let naysayers change my outlook, but admittedly, it was hard.

I kept reminding myself not to judge the base before seeing it for myself. Like the saying goes, 'never judge a book by its cover'.

Once I arrived, I realized Minot wasn't nearly as bad as people assumed. Instead of the "dark and gloomy" atmosphere people told me about, I saw a normal military base.

When I got to the main gate last summer, a large glowing sign displayed, 'Only The Best Come North'. I immediately wondered what the phrase meant. I soon realized the sign referred to the bond shared between the military and civilian community.

One of the first things I learned about Minot was the people here have a great demeanor about them. I was surprised how a base, and a town, with such a negative reputation was filled with such positive people.

These thoughts only strengthened as time passed.

Being in the Public Affairs career field, I've been able to connect with various people, not only at the base, but in the local community as well. I've had the chance to learn and share their stories while seeing what makes them who they are and why they love it here.

I've seen more than 10 military bases and out of all of them, Minot AFB has the best relationship with its surrounding community. The local community is so engaging and genuinely cares about what happens with the military members.

This was evident when I attended the 2016 North Dakota state fair on my second day here. Everyone Several spectators gather around a B-52H Stratofortress during the Northern Neighbors Day Air Show at Minot Air Force Base, N.D., Aug. 13, 2016. With more than 12 thousand air show attendees, the Minot community expressed how appreciative they were of the base's service members.

at the fair was so happy and cheerful. It was a great environment to be in, and I couldn't have asked for a warmer welcome to this base and state.

Then came Minot's air show event, Northern Neighbors Day 2016, which included more than 12 thousand attendees. The community expressed how happy they were to be there and how appreciative they were of Minot's military members.

Several people walked up to me and thanked me for my service, even though I had been here less than a month. They didn't care about that because, to them, I represented something greater, and that's what truly mattered.

That was the moment when the reality hit home for me. Minot was nowhere near as bad as people assumed.

Another great aspect about the people here is how willing they are to help one another. Every time I've struggled with anything, other Airmen would go out of their way to help me, whether it was during training or simply answering questions, they've done so without hesitation.

When I first got here, all I could think about was how others tried to negatively influence my opinion. Ironically, the people here have actually influenced my opinion for the better.

I believe a base is defined by the individuals who belong to it. The polite people who genuinely care about each other are what make me want to be here and to come to work every day.

Minot is proof of why people shouldn't judge something before experiencing it for themselves.

Despite initially having a few doubts, being here for a year has convinced me to never go into a situation with a negative attitude because things are never as bad as others make them out to be.

Although North Dakota winters are about 100 degrees colder than the ones in Alabama, the people here make everything warmer by far. They showed me there is something positive to every situation, and Minot is a perfect example of that.

A fair amount of education

AIRMAN 1ST CLASS ALYSSA M. AKERS
MINOT AIR FORCE BASE PUBLIC AFFAIRS

MINOT AIR FORCE BASE, N.D. -- The Education Center hosted an informative fair from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Minot Air Force Base, North Dakota, July 26. During the fair, 10 school representatives were available to speak to Team Minot personnel about pursuing higher education through their respective school. "The education fair was created primarily to provide an opportunity for all personnel on base to find the school that works best for them," said Ron Filkins, 5th Force Support Squadron education and training section chief. "With only three schools on base, this allowed personnel to talk face-to-face with different school representatives." The representatives gave out information packets on all degrees offered for their school, both on-campus and online, as well as special programs military members are eligible for. They were also available to answer any questions personnel had.

"It was nice to have the schools in one area," said Senior Airman Renee Wu, 5th Medical Operations Squadron dental assistant. "If you had questions, you could go around and ask them all at the same place to decide what schools you're interested in."

Education above the high school-level is important, said Filkins. Since Airmen looking to achieve senior NCO ranks are required to complete a Community College of the Air Force degree, he suggested continuing education toward at least a bachelor's degree.

"Education creates more well-rounded individuals," said Filkins. "The more you learn, the less likely you will want to stop. There's so much out there that you can learn."

The education fair is scheduled to occur every year, between July 4 and Memorial Day.
