Airman provides aid to Kent Island tornado victims

STAFF SGT. AJ HYATT | 70TH ISRW PUBLIC AFFAIRS

FORT GEORGE G. MEADE, Md. (AFNS) -- More than 9,000 homes and businesses on Kent Island were affected when an Enhanced Fujita-2 tornado tore across Maryland's eastern shore July 24, 2017. The tornado produced winds up to 125 mph and destroyed several homes, tore roofs from buildings and left thousands of people without power.

When Airman 1st Class Jesus Carrillo found out about the tornado, he didn't hesitate to provide aid.

Carrillo, a radio frequency transmission technician with the 707th Communication Squadron, learned about the tornado when he received an e-mail alert from the American Red Cross. The e-mail was seeking volunteers in the local area to respond to the aftermath of the tornado.

Dedicated to supporting his community, Carrillo submitted leave so he could join the relief efforts.

Still fairly new to the Red Cross, Carrillo has been a volunteer for a couple of months and assists as a disaster services and disaster action team member.

As a team member, his duties include providing food, shelter, comfort and care for families affected by major disasters such as fires, hurricanes and tornadoes.

"The disaster action team really interested me," Carrillo said. "Just being one of the first people on the scene and helping people in their immediate need is really rewarding to me. When I arrived to Kent Island on Thursday (July 27, 2017), it looked like a war zone. Trees were destroyed, houses were torn apart and debris was everywhere."

One of his first tasks was helping the disaster center that was established as a focal point for the tornado victims. The disaster center provided victims access to social services, animal control, public health, the sheriff's office, a shelter organization and many other groups, according to Carrillo.

"I was overwhelmed at first -- there was so much going on," he said. "Some folks were coming in barefoot and others without shirts. It shows you how much they have been going through and what some have lost."

After his time in the disaster center, Carrillo moved onto the "Hot Shot team" or "Mobile team," where he traveled through the community to reach people who couldn't travel to the disaster center.

Going out into the community to help families would cause a chain reaction, he said, because neighbors would see the volunteers helping a family, and then the neighbors would come to the volunteers for help.

"It was difficult to call it a day and stop helping," the 20-year-old Airman said. "We were tasked to help until 7 p.m., but we were often helping for another hour and half. It's the small things that do make a difference, like handing someone a bottle of water."

Carrillo recalled having to hold back tears during an interaction with an elderly lady during his assignment in the community.

"She had a grandchild with her and they were without electricity and water, and we ended up giving her a $650 debit card to help with food and a place to stay," Carrillo said. "The lady was in shock about all the support and money. We sat on her porch describing all the things we were going to do to help out the community and get them back on their feet, and she started crying and some of the volunteers started to tear up as well."

Carrillo said the training he received from both the Red Cross and the Air Force helped prepare him for these moments.

"The Air Force has taught me to be very adaptable and make do with the resources you have at hand," he said. "That is one thing that has helped me a lot--the mindset of being adaptable is critical when you're dealing with disasters that impact people's lives."

"We can always depend on (Airman 1st Class) Carrillo to lend a helping hand and selflessly dedicate his time to help others in need," said 1st Lt. Adrian Waters, of the 707th CS. "His caring personality and his energetic spirit are an undeniable asset to us."

Carrillo encourages other Airmen to get out and volunteer to make a difference in their communities.

"Airmen are always looking for volunteer opportunities," said Carrillo. "This is a great impact that you can see directly. You can see the aide and how it affects people. The American Red Cross has various volunteer opportunities such as volunteer management, disaster services, disaster action team, disaster preparedness presenter and public affairs. Explore the options and find something you are passionate about."

Savor Summer this August in North Dakota

NORTH DAKOTA LEGENDARY

August in North Dakota can be hot, hot, hot, so there's no better time than now to savor the waning days of summer. Before shipping the kids back to school, plan a camping weekend at one of North Dakota's many state parks. Stay up late beneath the prairie stars while taking in a live music or theater performance. Or simply pack the car with snacks and let one of North Dakota's beautiful back-country roads guide you through a lazy day.

Weekend Away

North Dakota's thirteen state parks provide visitors a blend of activities for a fun-filled weekend away. Anglers can cast for rainbow trout at Turtle River State Park (<http://www.ndtourism.com/arvilla/adventure/turtle-river-state-park>) – home to one of the few fly fishing streams in the state. Lewis and Clark State Park (<http://www.ndtourism.com/epping/adventure/lewis-and-clark-state-park>) is an ideal spot for hiking and enjoying expansive, picturesque views of Lake Sakakawea. History buffs will enjoy restored historic buildings at both Icelandic State Park (<http://www.ndtourism.com/cavalier/wildlife-viewing/icelandic-state-park>) and Fort Abraham Lincoln State Park (<http://www.ndtourism.com/mandan/cabins/fort-abraham-lincoln-state-park>).

Geocaching (<http://www.parkrec.nd.gov/activities/geocaching.html>) brings nature and technology together by encouraging users to explore scenic areas of North Dakota's state parks. Several state parks offer horse trails and corrals, so equestrians can experience the splendors of North Dakota from the saddle (<http://www.parkrec.nd.gov/information/parks/fees.html#horse>). A wide range of camping options are available, from tent and RV sites to cabins and teepees, so decide what's best for you and enjoy a night under the stars.

Evening Out

North Dakota's pleasant summer evenings are ideal for live, outdoor performances, making outdoor music and theater productions a favorite pastime. Often, the setting is as much an attraction as the performance (<http://www.ndtourism.com/performing-theaters>). The beloved Medora Musical (<http://medora.com/do/entertainment/medora-musical/>) provides foot-stomping, western-style entertainment set in North Dakota's rugged Badlands. Charming Sleepy Hollow Theatre and Arts Park in Bismarck (<http://www.shst.org/>) entertain audiences summer after summer with favorite musicals, comedies or dramas. Cities like Bismarck, Grand Forks and Fargo play host to big-name entertainers on world tours each summer and community festivals and fairs feature talented local and regional musicians and performers.

Byway Day

There are only a few places left in the United States to truly "get away from it all." North Dakota is one of them. The predominantly rural state means visitors can drive for miles on gloriously traffic-free byways through pristine, undeveloped countryside. Leisurely tour quiet backroads to enjoy wide-open skies and rolling prairie. Stop for photos at century-old, barely-standing farmsteads. Pull over to read roadside historical markers that tell the stories of people who came before you. And then cruise along – at your pace.

These are just a few North Dakota activities and events taking place in August. For more information, go to NDtourism.com or phone 701-328-2525 or 800-435-5663.

PRAIRIE ADVENTURES

BY PATRICIA STOCKDILL

"Water is first and foremost on a fisheries biologist's mind 24/7...water is everything."

– N.D. Game and Fish Department Fisheries Division Chief Greg Power.

Weather meteorologists, ranchers, farmers, and gardeners aren't the only ones paying attention to weather and North Dakota's dry conditions this year.

Fisheries biologists think about water, too.

A lot.

N.D. Game and Fish Department Fisheries Division Chief Greg Power is one who pays attention to weather and water. Or in the case of this year, lack of water.

The agency currently manages more than 430 lakes – more than double from a couple of decades ago.

That's because since 1993 the state has had a whole lot of water, growing small wetlands into fishable waters and larger wetlands into significant lakes.

True, there were a few hiccups along the way and a year or two of drier conditions, but overall North Dakota has been in an unusually long wet cycle.

This year's dry conditions have fisheries biologists like Power concerned. Granted, much of the state received early August rains and so far the drought hasn't occurred over an extended period of years.

Power has been in the fish business long enough to remember the state's last lengthy drought from 1988 through 1993. "That was horrible," he admitted.

It was hot. It was windy. It didn't rain until June 1993 when the skies opened up.

At this point, no one knows how long dry conditions will or won't persist. Maybe August rains signal the end.

One thing is certain, though, Power is pleasantly surprised that by early August no lakes had reported summer fish kills, despite hot, dry, and windy weather. He admits he's almost bracing himself for a potential influx of summer fish losses but rain and cooler weather could ease concerns.

Northern pike tend to be sensitive to warm water influxes, Power explained, and often are the first species to suffer summer losses.

Ironically, the Missouri River System is in good shape despite the drought, Power added, because of mountain river and stream inflows.

Another plus to the situation is many newer, larger lakes across much of the prairie aren't dropping as quickly as a person would have thought. Many of those lakes are better than expected for water levels, Power continued.

U.S. Geological Survey is conducting a study looking at interaction of lakes and ground water. While it's early in the project, it appears many newer, larger lakes could have a lot of interaction with ground water from an aquifer. Short-term, they could fare better than anticipated, Power concluded.

Drought is nothing new to lakes west of the Missouri River, Power added. They have a long history of major water level fluctuations. While they may see significant declines in water levels in drought conditions, "the recovery of those lakes can be rapid," he explained.

Early August rains essentially just soaked into parched ground and didn't contribute to increasing lake levels. "But you've got to start somewhere," Power added.

Ironically, not all of North Dakota is suffering drought conditions. The northeastern part of the state is OK for moisture. "The issue is the western one-half to two-thirds of North Dakota," Power said.

As a biologist who follows weather and water, Power stays in tune with short-term and long-term weather forecasts, so he has a hint of hope this drought won't be a repeat of '88 through '93: "In the big picture, so far climatologists indicate there is no evidence it could be long-term," he said.

Pumpkin Cream Cheese Swirl Muffins

INGREDIENTS:

1 3/4 cups all purpose flour
1 tablespoon pumpkin spice
1 teaspoon baking soda
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 (15 oz) can pumpkin (pure pumpkin puree)
1 cup granulated sugar
1/2 cup packed brown sugar
2 large eggs
1/2 cup vegetable oil
1 tablespoon vanilla extract
8 oz cream cheese
1/4 cup granulated sugar
1 large egg yolk
2 teaspoons vanilla extract

INSTRUCTIONS:

Preheat oven to 375°F. Place paper baking cups into muffin pan. Set aside. In a medium bowl, whisk flour, pumpkin spice, baking soda and salt until well combined. Set aside. In large bowl, whisk together pumpkin, sugar and brown sugar. Beat in eggs, vegetable oil and vanilla extract. Slowly whisk in the flour mixture, until there are no lumps. Fill muffin tins 3/4 full. In a medium bowl, beat cream cheese until smooth. Add in sugar, egg yolk and vanilla extract and beat until well combined. Top each muffin with about 1 tablespoon of cream cheese mixture and use a toothpick to swirl it into the batter. This will not look smooth, but it will bake up much prettier. (You can see exactly how I did this in the video above.) Bake muffins for 18-20 minutes, or until a toothpick inserted in the center comes out clean. I liked these best at room temperature or even slightly chilled! Store in an airtight container in the fridge.

Tool drive: Build a better community

RESILIENCE AMERICORPS VISTA

Minot, N.D.: Donations to North Dakota's first tool library are underway and community support to build its inventory is needed. The Minot Tool Library is a free service that will loan landscaping, gardening, and home improvement tools. The Minot Public Library, the home of the tool library, will host a tool drive on its parking lot on September 1 from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Members of the public are invited to contribute tools in good working condition and free of rust. Charitable donation receipts are available.

Developed in partnership with the Resilience AmeriCorps VISTAs and the Minot Public Library, the Minot Tool Library seeks to empower local residents by providing them with the proper tools and workshops needed for making improvements or modifications to their residence. The tool library will be open to Minot Public Library patrons, allowing them to reserve the tools they want to use. The process to become a patron is a simple one; to obtain a library card, present photo identification and proof of residence to a staff member at the Minot Public Library. Staff and volunteers will be working to offer workshops in the future. "The mission of the Minot Public Library is to connect, enrich, and inspire and I believe that the tool library will do all of these things as it allows us to connect people to resources they might not otherwise have and it will hopefully enrich people's lives by making them more self-sufficient and maybe even inspire them to do more than they ever imagined they could," said Janet Anderson, library director. "Libraries are about more than just books and the tool library is just another step the Minot Public Library is taking to meet the needs of our community."

Rugby museum receives gown worn by Queen Victoria

PRAIRIE VILLAGE MUSEUM

Prairie Village Museum in Rugby, N.D., has acquired a ceremonial dress worn by Queen Victoria of England. The dress is one of numerous gifts Queen Victoria bestowed upon her personal dresser, Marie Downing Williams, when Williams left the Queen's service in 1886 to homestead in Rolla, N.D. The dress and Marie Williams' story had been on display at the Rolla Public Library for 40 years. In June, the library board transferred ownership of the dress and several other items in the Marie Downing Williams/Queen Victoria Collection to the Geographical Center Historical Society, which operates Prairie Village Museum. The library board wanted to give more people an opportunity to learn about Marie and to view items associated with her service to the Queen.

Museum collections manager Stephanie Steinke says, "There are few, if any, dresses worn by Queen Victoria or other British royalty on display outside of England, let alone in the upper Midwest." Based on records provided, Victoria wore this particular dress during the 1870 Knight of the Garter Ceremony when Hugh Grosvenor, First Duke of Westminster, was invested with the Order of the Garter.

The dress will go on display at Prairie Village Museum

Friday, Aug. 11. An unveiling celebration is planned from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. for members of the Geographical Center Historical Society and invited guests. The exhibit will open to the general public at noon that day.

Steinke has spent hours researching Marie Downing Williams to verify and expand her story and to trace connections between the Rolla artifacts and Queen Victoria. Steinke has tracked down ship manifests, homestead claims and graveyard plots, each piece of information enriching the story of a Queen's dresser who left the palace for the love of Harry Williams, a fellow servant who dreamed of owning land in his own right first in Canada and then in Dakota Territory.

Marie arrived in Rolla in 1887 with nine trunks filled with wedding gifts from the Queen. She and Harry began farming their adjoining homestead claims, but Harry had meager success as a farmer and in 1910 they decided to rent out their land and move into town.

They rented a home in Rolla and opened it as a boarding house, where their borders dined on china, dish sets, and silverware gifted to Marie by the Queen. Eventually the Williamses moved back to their farmstead, but continued to rent out their land.

"Marie often loaned local brides her fancy royal dresses to wear for their weddings and gave away dresses and many other items to friends and acquaintances throughout her lifetime," Steinke said. "Marie and Harry were not well off, so they also traded the Queen's treasures for goods and services. It is thought the Queen's Order of the Garter ceremonial dress, now at the museum, came to Mrs. J.P. Widmeyer, the wife of a Rolla physician, as

You definitely don't need to be a terrific bowler to join a league and enjoy a weekly bowling outing. Rough Rider Lanes set up their leagues so low average bowlers can compete with high average bowlers. All but one of their leagues is organized with a handicap for all bowlers to make bowling more fun. A novice bowler with a 100 average receives anywhere from 80-100 pins of handicap to compete against a 200 average score bowler who does not receive any handicap.

At Rough Rider Lanes, participants may choose from both sanctioned and non-sanctioned leagues. Sanctioned leagues have a one-time sanctioning fee per bowler. This payment covers the bowler for all sanctioned leagues they bowl in for the season.

Some of the leagues available at Rough Riders Lanes include a Spouse League on Mondays, Scotch Doubles League on Tuesdays, Squadron Extramural League on Wednesdays, a Mixed Couples League on Thursdays, a Mixed Fun League on Fridays, and a 9 Pin No Tap League on either Tuesdays or Thursdays. The bowling center also offers a variety of Youth Leagues on Saturdays for children ages 3-17 years old.

Celebrating Air Force heritage: The “Great Centennial” squadrons

GARY BOYD, AETC COMMAND HISTORIAN

JOINT BASE SAN ANTONIO-RANDOLPH, Texas (AFNS) -- This calendar year has marked many great anniversaries, including the 75th anniversary of Air Training Command and the 70th anniversary of the Air Force. August marks the 110th anniversary of the Aeronautical Division of the Sign Corps—an unbroken line of Airmen began with its creation on Aug. 1, 1907. This year also marks the 100th Anniversary of America’s entry into World War I, and with it, some 43 active duty and reserve flying squadrons also celebrate or have celebrated their 100th anniversary. Their century of service reinforces something we all know implicitly—the enduring value of the squadron as the core of our Air Force.

While there has been much refinement in the character of the other Air Force organizations from numbered Air Forces, wings and groups over our history, the basic Air Force aerial framework at the squadron level has changed very little. Certainly names and missions of these squadrons have changed, but the essential fabric of a squadron commander, first sergeant and the arrayed staff and flight teams are largely the same. It is the essential Air Force unit, because squadrons have often been attached and recombined into lethal fighting elements—retaining their organic identity while fighting our nation’s wars.

The 1st Aero Squadron was the only active aerial squadron in the Signal Corps when World War I commenced in Europe in August 1914. It had on strength six aircraft, 12 officers and 54 enlisted personnel. Though small and badly resourced, the most essential formation in the Air Force was already recognizably organized. Initially each aviation company in a squadron was supposed to have a commander and first sergeant, but their small, functional size made this inefficient, making the squadron the center of basic leadership functions.

By World War I, U.S. squadrons were broken into two or more functional flights to help with maintenance and operations, just as the Royal Flying Corps was arranged. Because of the unique nature of flying activities, the squadron moved quickly towards its modern character—a formation dedicated to aerial operations, maintenance and support functions, unlike other Army units. With the world at war, the fledgling air service expanded as quickly as it could into 24 active and National Guard squadrons by early 1917, the result of a massive influx of “deficiency” funds from Congress to build a credible Air Force. The continued influx of personnel, and the investment in training and new aircraft, eventually allowed for the air service to reach about 10 percent of all Allied strength by Armistice Day. By that time, Brig. Gen. Billy Mitchell had mastered the art of concentrating air forces which had helped speed the war to an end.

The sheer number of units celebrating their centennials speaks to the grave conditions which spawned their birth. A case could be made that 1917 was the watershed in American air power history for this reason. While only two units in Air Education and Training Command are celebrating their centennial this year, the 87th Flying Training Squadron at Laughlin Air Force Base, Texas, and the 48th FTS at Columbus AFB, Mississippi, most of the other units were formed either as part of a training cadre at several American air bases, or formed at the advanced flying fields of France at Issoudun.

Training was the common thread that united every aero squadron in 1917. There was no combat-ready squadron ready to fly under the American Expeditionary Forces flag in 1917 (though Americans would become aces and heroes in foreign units such as the Lafayette Escadrille). As these squadrons trained to fill the void, they became resilient teams bound by incredibly swift commitment to the war effort. Training made the difference. Even with a force with little experience, American aircraft enjoyed a 4:1 victory ratio over their enemies and counted 72 aces among its number.

American air power went from negligible to decisive in the space of barely a year. American squadrons spent more time in flight training and mastering aerial weapons than their counterparts and a tradition of providing pilots with a winning syllabus and realistic experience prior to commitment to battle continues to this day in AETC’s advanced flying squadrons.

We have come almost full circle in a way in 2017. It can be said that all squadrons are trained and readied for action by a single force development commander controlling the cycles of training. The squadron as the essential Air Force unit had been conceived primarily for aircraft; but other units, support, space and missile squadrons for example, have continued that heritage and can lean on some of the giants of Air Force history for inspiration.

It is good to pause for a time and embrace the Air Force’s roots in this year of anniversaries, to think about how far we have come and what the next century of aerospace power will bring us. All will be well as long as our squadrons remain as they were conceived: cohesive, flexible, strong and expeditionary—and conceived for a mission of some gravity.

Mrs. Widmeyer’s granddaughter Barb Widmeyer Hanson donated the dress and other artifacts to the Rolla Public Library in 1977. The library had a special case built and displayed the dress for nearly half a century. Made of heavy black silk, the elegant two-piece dress features bands of embroidered nature and vegetation patterns. The three-quarter-length sleeves are trimmed with delicate pleated fabric, pleated back netting and black tassels. Black pleated netting edges the hemline and sweeping train.

“We had this beautiful piece of Rolette County history, but no one was coming in to see it,” said library director Becky Sheridan. So, the library board instructed Sheridan to offer the dress and other artifacts to nearby museums with the goal of providing the artifacts with proper care and greater public exposure. The Rugby museum was the first to say yes to the dress.

“The Rolla Public Library board has done the Geographical Center Historical Society a great honor by entrusting the Downing Williams/Queen Victoria artifacts to us for display and safe keeping,” said museum executive director Cathy Jelsing. “The Order of the Garter dress is stunning and in exceptional condition. We are aware of the responsibility associated with caring for and preserving it and all of the objects in the collection and are taking steps to make sure we do things right.”

Items not on display have been documented and packed in archival storage; a professional conservator has been engaged to evaluate all the objects and make recommendations on appropriate conservation and repairs; and Sue Steinke of Rugby made a major donation for the purchase of a new, archival case in which to display the Queen’s ceremonial dress.

The Queen Victoria/Marie Downing Williams exhibit will be a featured attraction during the museum’s annual Village Fair, which kicks off with a concert by Wild Hands, craft beer tasting and barbecue from 6 to 11 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 12, and continues Sunday, Aug. 13, with music, pioneer demonstrations and fair food from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Regular museum hours are 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and noon to 5 p.m. Sundays. For more information visit www.prairievillagemuseum.com, call 701-776-6414 or email prairievillagemuseum@gmail.com.
