Exceptional Distinguished Public Service Secretary of the Air Force Honors Mark Jantzer

His term as a member of the Air and Space Force Civic Leader program appeared to be coming to an end for Mark Jantzer. After 12 years of service, Mark would transfer to an emeritus status, but not before being presented with the Secretary of the Air Force Distinguished Public Service Award by Col. Daniel Hoadley, commander of the 5th Bomb Wing.

Recently the Northern Sentry was able to sit down with Mark and talk about his history of civilian service to the U.S. Air Force that earned him this prestigious award, the highest award to be presented to a nonemployee civilian.

"Î arrived in Minot in 1977. We fell in love with Minot immediately. To us (he and his wife Mary) it was like a big, small town. Besides work, I got involved in the Chamber of Commerce. I was on the ambassadors committee for a while" according to Mark. Soon the Jantzer family was rooted in the community, which would involve taking kids to activities "we started making friends and getting involved in the community, it was a good transition.'

Mary Jantzer was originally from the New Ulm, Minnesota area, and according to Mark "was a little reluctant to get that far away from her family, but she acclimated well" continues Iantzer.

Mark's first involvement with Minot Air Force Base was joining the Military Affairs Committee, and ended up being chairman of that committee in the late 80's.

In the 90's communities with military bases would soon learn about the BRAC (Base Re-Alignment & Closure) process. Keeping Minot off of the list of base closures became a major focus of the Minot community, and the group that was organized would end up being the predecessor to the now Task Force 21, 1996 would be a key year, as a majority of the base closures would be announced by then. "Even though the BRAC rounds were over in 1996, there was no guarantee that there wouldn't be another one" according to Jantzer "but there were also all of the decisions on budgets by the department of defense that could potentially affect Minot Air Force Base, so we decided that we needed to keep going. The new name that was chosen, Task Force 21, meant that we wanted to be around through the 21st Century, not just passed 1996." Then Chairman Buzz Syria and Mark Jantzer would make a trip to Washington, DC where Buzz introduced Mark to Senator(s) Kent Conrad and Byron Dorgan and Representative Earl Pomeroy, and "so the torch, I guess, was officially passed to the next generation, and that was kind of daunting at that time."

Mark shared that the next day (Tuesday, June 6th) he would be travelling to Camp Grafton as part of Task Force MIND (Military Issues in North Dakota). Mark and fellow Task Force 21 members Pete Hankla and Brekka Kramer were appointed to this group. "The purpose of this group is to make sure that there are leaders in the state that are informed about the military and what they were doing not only in our city, but other cities where the military existed" continues Jantzer "and the goal there is to make North Dakota one of the most military friendly states that folks can come to." Jantzer points to the recently passed legislation that eliminates state income tax on retirement pay for veterans.

As far as the Distinguished Public Service Award, it states that Jantzer "served as a Department of the Air Force advocate, connecting his regional and professional communities to the Air and Space Force through his expertise in military operations and civilian socioeconomic issues. He conscientiously advised senior Air and Space Force leaders on the development of national and international military programs as well as facilitated cooperation between civilian communities and Department of the Air Force entities to ensure each program's success. He openly communicated information about Air and Space Force missions and requirements to the American public, increasing awareness and understanding among local, regional, national and international audiences. Mr. Jantzer's concern for Airmen, Guardians and their families, as well as his desire to facilitate communities' service to those service members, was essential to his stewardship of an enduring relationship between the Department of the Air Force and the Nation. The distinctive accomplishments of Mr. Jantzer reflects the highest credit upon himself and the Department of the Air Force."

For Jantzer, being recognized was certainly an honor "that I didn't expect."

Besides his commitment to the mission of Minot Air Force Base, Iantzer has been active in the Minot community serving on the Minot City Council as well as being active in the Minot Chamber/EDC.

I Guess I Was An APG

I was standing in line at Rocker's waiting to place an order for my noon lunch, when I noticed three young Airmen ahead of me with an APG insignia on their sleeves. I am the curious type, and after trying to think of what APG could stand for, I finally had to ask.

One of the young men, with a very southern accent, chuckled and said, well out there on the flight line we're All Purpose Grunts. With a little push back to his buddy, one of the other three said "can't you see, he works for the Northern Sentry. We don't want to give him the wrong impression. Sir, APG really stands for Airframe, Powerplant & General." The third member of the group then added that they worked on the B 52's.

So, I joked with them that when I worked on our farm, I, too, would be labeled as an All Purpose Grunt. If there needed to be oil changed on a tractor or truck, it was my job. If we had to run to town to get parts, it was drop everything and be on your way because something needed to be repaired because the activity at hand; seeding, harvest or hauling grain, had come to a halt.

While in line, I learned about how a B-52 could need repairs to the "skin" of the aircraft. That means removing a piece, repairing it in the shop, and then replacing it on the aircraft. You just don't run to the parts store and get a new piece on a B-52. I am thinking these three young men were probably mid-20's, which means they were born in 2000'ish. A bit of quick math and I was able to tell them that the planes they are working on are 60 years old. Way over than twice their age. They went into a lot of other repairs that they were responsible for taking care of; some I understood, and some not.

I shared with them the jobs that were common to the most unskilled farm hand, that being me. Sure, I worked on a farm most of my life. But when it came to the new, high tech equipment with computers and GPS screens, it was better for me to go back to changing oil or moving a truck from one field to the other. I can operate the small garden tractor and keep the three acres of lawn mowed around the buildings on the farm. There was always a satisfaction with finishing those jobs and moving on to the next. These three shared that someday they would like to work on a newer airplane. I guess if you are working on a B-52, you really have nowhere to go but newer.

As we got closer to the ordering point, I asked them about the reengining process about to take place on the B-52's. I expected them to be excited, but it was more of a "I'll believe it when I see it" type of attitude. "They've been looking at doing that for a long time" said one of the Airmen. "And maybe this time they'll get it done."

From my standpoint, what I did on our farm was as much a part of the necessary process to success in farming as anything. And next time I see those APG guys, I'll think the same of what they do. My Dad used to say that there are many moving parts in a watch. But take even the smallest one out, and the watch no longer works. Congrats to all of those who wear the APG on their sleeve. It (whatever "it" is) doesn't work without you. Enough said

BEST KEPT SECRET

On a hot day, (like last Sunday), the marina store at Fort Stevenson sells a lot of ice cream. Pontoons loaded with kids and adults stop and tie up to the dock in the marina and head up the steep ramp for dishes or cones of the now famous Pride Dairy ice cream. It's a great place to cool down and enjoy a Sunday afternoon treat.

UPSIDE DOWN UNDER MARVIN BAKER

Back in the 1960s, the United States Department of Agriculture produced a map of the nation with a number of hardiness zones to help guide gardeners and landscapers with better planting advice.

However, those early maps don't reflect the same zones as today's maps. There are no doubt, warmer, albeit slightly, patterns that are moving farther north. In fact, when you take North Dakota into account, there have been some major changes since 1990.

It's the same with Manitoba and Saskatchewan, which border North Dakota to the north. Their zones, created in 1970, have changed one hardiness zone.

Here in the United States, hardiness zones are categorized from zero to 12 and within each zone there is an A and B zone. All of North Dakota is within either zone 3 or zone 4. But what is interesting about this is there are small pockets of the state that might surprise you. We all know it can get what we call "bitter cold" in the winter. Since February 1996, I've seen three mornings drop to 40 and 41 below zero without the wind chill. I remember these mornings because extreme cold fascinates me more than I'm afraid of it. Two of those mornings were consecutive when I lived in Langdon and the other happened on a trip from Bismarck to Carpio. But we also know that North Dakota can have wild swings in temperatures. I've also witnessed an extreme high of 114 above zero, which was in Hazelton when I was growing up in the late '60s.

Many of us talk about these extremes and make the assumption that if we have an unusually cold winter or extremely hot summer, That's our zone. We have to remember, those are extremes and our hardiness zone isn't based solely on the bottom of the Fahrenheit scale, although that's part of the equation.

The coldest zone in North Dakota is Zone 3A, which is almost exclusively in Bottineau County. Long-term extremes are listed as 35 to 40 below zero. It tends to follow the Souris River valley south, just touching the northern tip of McHenry County. There's also a 3A pocket in the southeast corner of Bottineau County, in the Willow City area.

Nearly all of the rest of the northern tier of North Dakota, at least above U.S. Highway 2, is Zone 3B, which is listed at 30 to 35 below, meaning every winter will probably drop to those temperatures.

The gooseneck of Ward County is interesting because that narrow piece of property takes in two hardiness zones. Carpio and Minot are considered Zone 4A, but just eight miles up the road from Carpio, in Donnybrook, we fall into Zone 3B. Kenmare is also 3B.

Again, there are pockets of 3B elsewhere in the state surrounded by Zone 4, which emcompasses most of the rest of the state. Southeast of Williston, nearly all of Nelson County, a small area south of Beulah, and here's a real surprise, the extreme southern part of Morton County, south of Flasher, are all Zone 3B.

What makes that spot south of Flasher really interesting is that less than 30 miles south of there, near Fort Yates which is in Sioux County, there is a pocket of Zone 4B, which is described as 20 to 25 below for long-term extremes.

Another 4B pocket exists west of there, straddling the Sioux/ Adams County line, which is just to the east of Hettinger. There is one more 4B pocket and that is in western LaMoure County, which is the Edgeley area, but not reaching Kulm, 15 miles west or LaMoure, 20 miles east.

North Dakota, but by the time you get south of Pierre, S.D., most of that part of South Dakota is Zone 5A, including Rapid City and Sturgis.

Back to those early maps; most of northeastern North Dakota, starting from Minot east to the Minnesota border and south into the Devils Lake Basin, was all Zone 2, with the rest of North Dakota being Zone 3.

By 1990, all of that had changed. The entire Red River Valley, including Pembina and Drayton, were now classified as Zone 4, with a couple of more spots around Jamestown and Cooperstown and the U.S. Highway 83 corridor, north almost to Minot.

Changes in Alaska are also quite dramatic. Up until 1980, nearly the entire state was 2A or below. By 2010, nearly the entire state, including Prudoe Bay and Point Barrow along the North Slope, had become 3A and 3B, with a large swath north of Achorage now 4B. That means most of northern Alaska has the same growing conditions as northern North Dakota.

There are no Zone 5A areas in

Memories of Main Street

SLICE OF LIFE KIM FUNDINGSLAND

The beginning of the Magic City all started in downtown Minot, the heart of sales and services for a rapidly growing community emerging on the fading frontier.

Of course, over the years there's been lots of changes. More people. More businesses. More opportunities. Expanded city limits.

Interestingly though, are the buildings on Main Street where almost all city activity was funneled for many years – banking, shopping, medical services, entertainment, restaurants, railroad passengers. A surprising number of those early day buildings still overlook downtown. No, not the earliest ones that succumbed to fire or were torn down, but certainly several that easily surpass 100

One of the anchors of early day Main Street remains in place today – the former 1st National Bank building at the north end of the street. The first bank on that location was the Great Northern, established in 1897.

"That building stood until it was demolished in 1929 to make room for a new bank," said Dave Lehner, creator and historian for Minot Memories. "There's been a bank on that corner for well over 100 years."

A bank in the center of business in a growing community was quite fitting. Across the street to the east in those early days was the Leland Parker Hotel, Minot's first hotel with electricity and its own septic system.

One of the older structures on Main Street is the Scofield Block building constructed in 1905. It was built by James Scofield, Minot's first mayor.

The Fair building, originally built by the Ellison brothers, still stands on a corner of south Main. It housed Ellison's Department Store which had expanded from its 25-foot-wide location to 50 feet by annexing an adjacent business.

There's something about walking the sidewalks on Main Street today, thinking about all the history associated with the early days of Minot. It really wasn't very long ago when horses watered from a fountain on Main, and cars mixed with horses and wagons and people.

Those days are gone now, but many of the buildings that played important roles in Minot's history remain in use today.

There are many connections to the early days of Minot all along Main Street. KIM FUNDINGSLAND

Airman of Minot: Lammy Vong

SENIOR AIRMAN CALEB S. KIMMELL, 5TH BOMB WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

MINOT AIR FORCE BASE, N.D. - One of the greatest strengths of the U.S. Air Force is the diversity of the men and women that serve. Airmen from all over the world come together to accomplish a single mission: keep our country safe.

Airman 1st Class Lammy Vong, financial operations technician from the 5th Comptroller Squadron, came to the United States when she was just ten years old. She was born and raised in Vietnam, and moved to New Jersey with her family as a young girl.

Vong says communities in Vietnam were very small and closeknit. However, she remembers the transition to life in the U.S. being very challenging as she was growing up, which led to many hardships that she had to overcome. She learned to grow and work hard from a very early age, as many responsibilities such as helping her grandmother and family were given to her.

Vong feels that if you hold responsibility, respect will soon follow. She learned to respect her elders and those above her. This is a very high-held value in Vietnamese culture.

"Through the respect I gave my elders came the great honor to learn from them and their vast experiences" said Vong.

Recalling her strong family values, she believes she is open minded to learning from other Airmen who may be able to teach her something new. She has learned the strengths a close community can have, whether in Vietnam, New Jersey, or Minot. She has learned

MINOT AIR FORCE BASE, N.D.

On May 25, the 5th and 91st Maintenance Groups hosted their Maintenance Professionals of the Year awards banquets. The events were held to recognize and honor outstanding Airmen assigned to the 5th and 91st MXGs who demonstrated exceptional performance and achievement during the previous year.

Col. Patrick Baum, 91st MXG commander, delivered the opening remarks for the 91st MXG's MPOY awards banquet. He expressed his admiration for all the Airmen and everything they achieved over the past year in spite of obstacles they faced.

"I'm just in awe of all the Airmen here and what you've been able to achieve," said Baum. "You've faced adversity on a daily basis and you just keep going after it every single day."

Retired U.S. Air Force Col. Andrew Kovich, former 91st MXG commander, also attended the event and addressed the crowd. He stressed the importance of the 91st MXG's mission and commended the Airmen for their efforts in accomplishing it.

'You all are an asset of national importance and your expertise is essential to defending our country," said Kovich. "Millions have served before you, millions will serve after you, and you all are doing your part right here and now."

Just a few hours later, Airmen and families from across Minot Air Force Base came together for the 5th Bomb Wing's MPOY awards banquet.

The event honored maintenance members at the Group and Air Force Global Strike Command level with awards for their contributions to the mission.

SENIOR AIRMAN EVAN LICHTENHAN, 5TH BOMB WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

MINOT AIR FORCE BASE, ND

In 1984, there was a young man freshly graduated from high school who had only dreamt of one thing; to serve his country just like his father.

As soon as that young man could, he signed an active-duty contract with the United States Air Force and shipped off to Basic Military Training.

"I joined at 17 and had my 18th birthday in basic training," said Lt. Col. Stanley Grodrian, 5th Operational Medical Readiness Squadron commander. "I didn't really have a preference on what I did, I just wanted to serve."

Grodrian's first duty location as a Security Forces defender was K. I. Sawyer Air Force Base, Michigan. He enjoyed being a defender, and found value in his service to the United States Air Force.

After completing his 4-year contract, he decided to make the Air Force a career. Unfortunately, the Air Force had other plans for him.

"They called all of us first term Airmen at that point," Grodrian said. "Essentially the message was: closing bases, cutting the force, we don't need your services, have a nice life."

Due to base realignment and closures of 1988, Grodrian separated from active duty. Although he was discharged, his desire to serve did not vanish. He decided to join the Indiana Air National Guard and pursue a career in law enforcement.

"I thought I was set up pretty well for a law enforcement career," explained Grodrian. "I had a degree, I had been on our base hostage negotiation team, was trained by the FBI, I thought I was set up. But in the late 80's, the economy had taken a downturn. Every department I applied for had a two to three year waiting list."

After applying to multiple police departments with no luck, one of Grodrian's friends convinced him to take a security job at a local hospital. Another friend encouraged Grodrian to take an EMT course, which ultimately started him down the path of medicine. Grodrian's passion for the medical field bloomed from there on.

He started working as a technician in the local emergency room, where he eventually found out the nurses he worked side by side with made twice the amount of money as paramedics, for only one more year of school. This helped him make the decision to stay in school and pursue a nursing degree.

"I still liked that prehospital environment," said Grodrian. "I was a flight nurse for ten years and traveled all over the country. I had a blast. But there was always something that I didn't finish in uniform. It had been 14 years since Grodrian was on active duty and in 2009, right before he turned 40 vears old, he decided he had one more shot to rejoin the Air Force. "I started talking to a recruiter, all of the stars aligned," said Grodrian. "They took me back, and I'll stay until they kick me out again. Civilian flight nursing was the best job ever, but this is the best career.' Grodrian returned to active duty as a Captain, working in the emergency room at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base as a bedside nurse. He found the transition from civilian to military emergency rooms to be challenging. In his civilian life, he worked his way up to leadership positions, and returned to working as a bedside nurse when he reenlisted.

Grodrian says he had one main objective for his second enlistment. He decided he needed to join a critical care air transport team (CCAT). Unfortunately, he never deployed with a CCAT, but he did get the opportunity to do so with a forward surgical team.

Eventually, after many years of hard work and four deployments, Grodrian found himself in command of the 5th Operational Medical Readiness Squadron at Minot Air Force Base, North Dakota.

"Squadron Command has been fantastic," Grodrian said. "Not that it's all been a bed of roses, but it has been fantastic to help our folks grow."

Additionally, he has two sons who decided they wanted to follow in their father's footsteps. One is an Army Intelligence officer, and the other is an Air Force Recruiter.

Grodrian is now taking command of the 39th Operational Medical Readiness Squadron, Incirlik Air Base, Turkey.

With a surplus of hardships and challenges, Grodrian managed to remain resilient and take control of his future, starting from an Airman 1st Class walking the flightline, to becoming a Medical Readiness Squadron commander.

ODE TO DANDELIONS

Patricia Stockdill

It's time to finally admit it -1 am at peace with survived its own whirling ride. dandelions.

I am OK with dandelions.

I have accepted dandelions.

In other words – I give up.

The dandelions have won. A little yellow nonnative plant has beaten me into submission.

It's really no different than how the multitude of squirrels dominating the four-legged Hunting Maniacs of the household. While the dogs remain on high alert, they have essentially resigned themselves to the fact they can't open doors and windows to launch a full-scale attack on what they consider the scourge of the earth.

It's only when they're outside conducting secret missions on errant squirrels too intent on eating flowers and the garden goodies that they've been successful in scurrying them away.

Even so, usually Garnet, the middle Hunting Maniac, comes out with blood – hers, not the squirrel's. Of course the bunnies rule, as well, even though rabbit fever disease set their numbers back a few years ago. In typical cottontail fashion, their population rebounded quickly.

Part of why the determination has been made that dandelions rule is the realization one day that they provide early season food for pollinating insects.

That realization finally hit one day while conducting the first-of-the-season mowing expedition, a project that even with a whip-and-turn, zip-and-go ZTR 50inch mower still takes almost two hours.

Dodging trees and perennial gardens, it became quite apparent that dandelions deserve to rule because I'm convinced they have ears and can hear a mower zeroing in on them.

They also have amazing gymnastic capabilities. How I determined this is because I swear they absolutely, positively duck their little happy yellow faces (OK, technically its flower petals) and stems, only to pop back up after going over it with sharp, rapidly rotating mower blades.

A book on edible wild plants, "Wild Seasons, Gathering and Cooking Wild Plants of the Great Plains" popped into my mind as I thought about dandelions as a food source for pollinators.

Hmm, dandelions as a food source for humans. Yum.

There is dandelion wine.

But the member of the sunflower family – yup, dandelions are related to another food source for wild critters and humans alike, the sunflower - is more than something to drink.

According to the book's author, Kay Young, young dandelion leaves can be eaten uncooked or cooked. Older leaves can be enjoyed cooked, as can buds and flowers.

Dandelion roots can be roasted or even brewed for a hot drink.

One huge caveat comes with using dandelions – or any wild or domestic plant, for that matter – never; ever consume plants from areas that were potentially treated with any chemical, including insecticides or herbicides. Also avoid areas frequented by animals.

Another caveat is that dandelions contain tannin and some research indicates drinking high levels of tannin can be harmful.

Spring is the best time to collect young leaves but roots, older leaves, buds, and flowers are good to collect whenever they're found - just remember to avoid areas sprayed with chemicals.

Leaves are best when picked in the morning and before the plant flowers. They're still edible on flowering plants, just more bitter. Look for lightcolored leaves, too, for less bitterness.

Dandelion leaves have an array of uses – in soups stews, quiche, or scrambled eggs.

As a salad green, look for young leaves and serve with a little toss of vinegar. Add some bacon pieces and maybe a sliced hard-boiled egg, salt and pepper and a little sugar to taste. Simply boil the leaves about four minutes, fry the bacon, carefully add the boiled leaves, season, and add the eggs when removed from the pan and ready to serve.

VACATION READY CAR CARE

Stock up on vehicle breakdown supplies

Unforeseen situations can crop up at any time. Anyone who has had a roadside breakdown in their car understands this. A flat tire or an engine malfunction is something no driver wants to experience, but those with a well-stocked vehicle emergency kit and breakdown strategy can get through most situations rather easily.

A 2017 survey from AAA found that 40 percent of drivers in the United States are not ready to handle a typical roadside emergency breakdown. The organization estimates it helps some seven million motorists get back on the road each summer. A well-equipped roadside emergency kit may help drivers get their vehicles back on the road on their own.

First aid kit: The first aid kit will celebrate its 133rd birthday in 2021. The Johnson & Johnson company began commercializing first aid kits in 1888. Having a first aid kit in the car to treat minor injuries can be helpful in the event of an accident or even after injuring oneself during a breakdown.

· Fire extinguisher: Cars are full of various mechanical parts and are susceptible to catching on fire. The National Fire Protection Association says vehicle fire extinguishers need to be rated for Class B and C fires.

· Jumper cables: A weak or dead battery is often the culprit in breakdowns. Jumper cables enable drivers to get a charge from another motorist, and may help get a person back on the road quickly. If possible, get a set of cables that also comes with safety gloves and heavy duty clamps, offers Defensive Driving Online, a defensive driving course.

· Mobile phone/charger: A mobile phone is essential for calling for assistance, but the phone is only useful if it's charged.

· Blanket: Keep a blanket in the trunk or another storage area. Should the vehicle die in cold weather, that blanket can help keep passengers warm until assistance arrives.

· Basic tools: Tools like a screwdriver, ratchet set and wrench may enable drivers to complete minor repairs. Tools also should include tirechanging gear, such as a jack and lug nut remover.

• Traction aid: Non-clumping kitty litter or sand can provide the traction needed to get off of a slippery area of roadway.

· Flashlight: A flashlight can help keep you visible and able to see your surroundings in dark conditions.

· Flares: Should a breakdown occur in the dark, flares can alert other drivers.

 Snacks and water: Water and food that stores well, such as emergency rations, granola bars or trail mix, can quell hunger pangs and provide an energy boost while waiting for help.

· Rope/bungee cords/tarp: These items can be used in various situations to secure a vehicle.

While drivers can gather these items separately, many companies offer all-in-one vehicle emergency kits. A safety kit is essential for all drivers.

Conversations with Colonel and Mrs. Schlabach about the 91 OG

ERIN BEENE, NORTHERN SENTRY

In order to understand the essential functions of each group in the 91st Missile Wing and get an in-depth life and career perspective from Team Minot's senior leaders, the Northern Sentry is running a series of articles talking to the people who understand the most about the importance of their group: the Group Commanders themselves.

The third and final in this series of interviews is Colonel Jimmy Schlabach, Commander, 91st Operation Group. In order to get a more personalized view of the mission, he and his spouse Monica Schlabach agreed to be interviewed and share some of their personal aspects of what the 91st Operations Group is about, why it's important and what they have both gone through to get to this position in their Air Force journey.

Northern Sentry: Please explain in your own words what the 91 OG does and how each of the squadrons work together:

Col Schlabach: The mission that we have is to conduct operations. The analogy I would use with it is if you think like a NASCAR team. The operations group would be the drivers of the car. We rely on the support of mechanics and the crew chief, pit crew, and all the hundreds of others to get the mission done. What we do is we execute. The 91st Ops Group folks are the ones that are going to be doing the actual command and control, and the launch of the missiles themselves.

We have four squadrons, the 740th, 741st and 742d Missile Squadrons. And then we have the 91st Operational Support Squadron. The "7-4 Club's" job primarily is to go on to work and operate the missiles. We do that in a three-week rotation. The OSS, they support the [missileers] by making sure of a myriad of logistics are taken care of that those squadrons need.

NS: How has everyone adapted to the relatively new one-week rotation schedule? Do you think they will ever switch back to the 24 hour alert?

Col Schlabach: For the foreseeable future we are going to continue this deployment. In my opinion, the positive tradeoffs vastly outweigh some of the negative, which is why we are continuing. We've seen growth and our proficiency in currency which means we are able to focus better on how we execute the mission not only during the week, but during our training cycle too.

NS: What would happen to the base if your group could not perform its functions?

Col Schlabach: We provide one third of the ICBMs here. So essentially, a third of the nuclear deterrent provided by ICBMs would be gone. That would have a major impact on the nation's ability to operate deterrence.

NS: What is the most important foundation of your command leadership philosophy?

Col Schlabach: Most important foundation is service. Service to the Nation. But my personal philosophy as a commander is service to the Airmen in the 91 OG, to include our civilians as well. In my role, we are focused on the mission while also ensuring we take care of Airmen. So with that in mind trying to balance all of those things [is difficult] because sometimes one tugs a little harder. It's kind of a push and pull at times but it's that balance of serving the mission, which we need, but also serving the Airmen.

NS: When in your Air Force career did you realize being a group commander was a goal?

Col Schlabach: I'll be honest, I never made being a group commander a deliberate goal. At some point I really wanted to be a squadron commander, but after that it was never something that I purposefully drove towards.

NS: So what comes next in your career?

Mrs. Schlabach: We don't know. We haven't been informed. We're just at that stage of life where we are up for anything. We've finally matured in our Air Force lives enough to realize that pretty much anything can happen at any time, and we'll adjust to and enjoy whatever is next. Col Schlabach: Whatever the AF needs us to do right now is what's next.

NS: What do you want spouses and families in the 91 OG to be aware of or prepare for when at Minot AFB?

Mrs. Schlabach: I would say that they should be prepared to be surprised. I think sometimes because of the northern location people get an idea that it might not be a preferred base. But having been here before in the beginning of our career and then coming back, we have a unique perspective of seeing what being stationed at Minot did for our family. And now that we have been everywhere, we can really see that people liken Minot to the overseas experiences. They are such a closeknit community.

Col Schlabach: Having come from FE Warren, where you have Ft Collins and Denver, folks tend to dissipate more. You'll have people live all over. Just the geography, the proximity here, folks tend to congregate together, which builds the family atmosphere. Also, I would like to impart to not take advice from anyone who hasn't been here.

NS: Looking back on your AF career, what is something that you wish you had known, personally or professionally?

Mrs. Schlabach: I wish that I had worried less about the future. I was very preoccupied with what base we would go to next and what the schools would be like. I put pressure on [Col Schlabach] to get us where I thought our children would flourish. As I look back, we were fine.

Col Schlabach: I would inform my younger self that your leaders take care of you and are personally invested in you. When you're early in your service you just don't see it. Everybody, every leader, whether it's senior enlisted leader or a commander, they are personally invested in every single Airman under their care. I never really appreciated that fact. It's one of those things where unless you have someone explain it to you, you just don't know.

NS: Has there been anyone in the past that has specifically influenced you for the better?

Col Schlabach: I've been fortunate to have been able to work with many, many folks who have influenced me over my career. However, the one person who influenced me the most, was my good friend, Lt Col (Retired) William Bragg. He was a priorenlisted officer who was in the same OTS class as me, and we spent the first 8 years of my career together. He mentored me countless times. He also didn't shy away from telling me when I needed to do better, but he did it as a servant leader who knew I needed to hear the tough feedback. He fought cancer for over 5 years, and we lost him last Fall. I miss him like crazy, and I hope my service is something that makes him smile.

NS: What sacrifices have you made over the AF career? Personally or professionally?

Mrs. Schlabach: The year before we came here [Col Schlabach] had to go to school in DC and it was our son's senior year of high school. We had [previously] made a pact that if at all possible we would keep the family together unless he was deployed and we were not allowed to go. We had decided for us, the best way was to always stay together. But then came this situation where our son would have been about to finish all four years [in one place]. He was settled in school, so I stayed back with my son for the senior year and it was a tough year. I'm glad we made the decision; it was the best decision at the time and it worked out. But it was hard. You learn to pivot and celebrate [holidays] when you can too, not on specific dates.

Col Schlabach: I've used the phrase tradeoffs because sacrifice yes, but it's also a choice. The other tradeoff is when the Airmen need me and [my family] get put on the secondary. Where we had plans, but then it just didn't happen. It's easy to say 'family always comes first,' well actually it's not and acknowledging that is tough because vou feel like an awful person, but at the same time it's kind of a reality. It's hard because nobody wants to have to make those sacrifices.

NS: Being a group commander and spouse often has been said to come with a certain level of perks and expectations. What has been your experience in this role so far and what do you like or find challenging about it?

Mrs. Schlabach: I think it's been an adjustment for me in his new position. Coming from watching him in squadron command, we knew every family in his squadron. I love knowing everybody in the unit and it has been a hard transition because we now serve four times as many families as we did when he was a squadron commander. A couple of people introduced themselves to me and they work in this group and I didn't recognize them, which breaks my heart.

Col Schlabach: It's just a different role, so you have to kind of find a new you. It's been a challenge as a group commander and a colonel because I have to be mindful of my initial reactions during challenging situations. How I react sets a tone for the whole group. It's reacting to situations in a way that is best, not necessarily the way that is natural. That can happen for both positive and negative situations. It's a bigger microscope. However, a benefit is that I get to interact with the community much more in this position. I say the community wraps its arms around and they love our Airmen, almost as much as we do. That is a really cool perk to see.

Col & Mrs. Schlabach spoke candidly about their past 23 years in the service and whole-heartily gushed about how Minot holds a special place in their hearts because of friendships and community, which they claim is unrivaled at any of the other missile bases. They were both touchingly vulnerable when mentioning the loss of their dear friend, Lt Col (Ret) William Bragg, and how this loss affected their perspective in life and the Air Force. It was evident from their conversations that friendships maintain an important and steady aspect to their lives.

The Schlabachs talked about what it was like to be empty nesters and how despite all their worry about how their two kids would grow up in the military community, they have adjusted amazingly, and they think it is in part to always be taught at a young age to adapt to different situations. Col Schlabach encouraged younger missileers to give Minot a shot for what it is and not take the multitude of advice floating around out there from people who never lived here.

One of the most fascinating observations during the 91 MW Group Commander interviews was the candor in which each of them approached even the trickier topics, which is something this reporter appreciated immenselyand hopefully you readers do too!

Official Cap of Major League Baseball

In 2007, Col Schlabach spent time with long time friend and mentor Lt Col (Ret) William Bragg attending a San Fransisco Giants game at Oracle Park.

All About Pets

Pets have allergies t00!

Just like their humans, pets can have allergies too, and they are no fun for your furry friends! Pet allergies can be triggered by a variety of things including food ingredients, bug bites/stings, seasonal, prescriptions, chemicals, and more. Did you know that protein sources (including chicken, beef, or lamb) are some of the most common allergens for dogs? Here are some of the symptoms of allergies in your cats and dogs:

take a lot of trial and error to narrow down a culprit. Make sure you keep accurate tabs on which products you use on and around your pet, as well as all the foods that they ingest and what they are around when outside.

If your pet is showing severe signs of allergic reaction and even anaphylaxis (swelling, hives, itching, excessive salivation/drooling, vomiting, diarrhea, pale gums, seizure, wheezing or trouble breathing, etc.) drop everything and get your pet to the emergency vet immediately! One of the closest émergency vets to Minot Air Force Base is Pinkerton Animal

In more mild cases, Benadryl is usually the go-to at home remedy, but do not give your pet any medication or remedies without consulting your veterinarian first as you can potentially do more harm than good without the

In order to help our pets live their best lives, it's important to keep an eye on them, their habits and their reactions to catch any allergies as soon as possible. If you got sick every time you ate chicken, you probably wouldn't want to keep eating it every day, would you? Neither does your pet!

Minot Hot Tots Weekly Recap

MINOT HOT TOTS

It's been a crazy opening week for the Minot Hot Tots. On their home opener presented by KMOT, the Hot Tots played a game for a completely sold out crowd. This was the first sold out crowd at Corbett Field since the 1990s. On top of that, the Hot Tots made history by selling more merchandise in one game day than any other Northwoods League team ever! While the game was close, the Tots lost to the St. Cloud Rox, 5-3.

The first pitch was thrown out by Mayor Tom Ross and KMOT Sports Reporter, Zach Keenan. The crowd got their first look at the Elison Assisted Living Hot Totties, the the crazy on-field games, and of course the toughest spud around, the mascot, Tate R. Tot.

The second game, powered by 28 Tastes and Taps, was also electric for the Hot Tots. While this game wasn't quite sold out, it was extremely close. Fans still got the same experience with high quality entertainment given by the BNSF Promo Conductors the entire Tot team. The crow also experienced some interesting weather delay while fighting against rain and hail. While the energy was high, the Hot Tots were still working to get in a groove as a team and fell to another lost to the St. Cloud Rox, 11-0.

The game on Sunday, June 4 welcomed many walk up fans to for their first Hot Tot experience. The team played 4 previous games on the road prior to being back at Corbett Field, this time against the Willmar Stingers. More weather delays made the overall game last a whopping 5 hours, but the delay was definitely a party, from dance battles, to hot dog eating contests, to player and crowd karaoke. The Tots kept up with the stingers until the end of the game but eventually ended the game with a loss of 11-8.

The Monday, June 5 game

powered by North American Coal was a celebration for many kids around Minot. The Hot Tots started their reading program in March of this past year and incentivized kids to reach their reading goals. The ultimate home run prize was a free ticket to this game. Students roamed the grand stands with excitement as they participated and watch fun on-field games and skits as well as watch the future greats of baseball. The Tots once again lost to the Willmar Stingers 12-0.

The June 8 game poweredy by Schultz Property Maintenance was a game that kept the whole crowd laughing. It was the first theme night of the year for the Tots and they chose to honor the suggestions given by fans on social media and went with a Napoleon Dynamite theme night. This night was full of movie references and really brought the spirit of "tots" to life.

Coming up for the Hot Tots are some extremely crazy games, the next game for the Hot Tots will feature juggling stuntman, Mad Chad. Fans will get to watch the Tots take on the Eau Clair Express while also getting circuslike entertainment as Mad Chad jugglings chainsaws, live tasers, and Fans more. can also get in on the only ticket discount the team provides, h McDonald's Friends and Family Deal. This deal comes with 4 tickets to the game, 4 Hot Tot hats, and 4 combo meals from McDonald's for more than half of the original value.

On Saturday June 10, the Hot Tots want fans to sit back and relax for Self Care Saturday powered by Minot Health Clinic. The experts at Minot Health Clinic will provide fans with tips and tricks to keep themselves happy and healthy while enjoying a fun night out at the ballpark.

June 11 through June 13 will be the final games for the Hot Tots before hitting the road and will round out the 6 day homestand for the team! The North Dakota Purple Star Award

Did you know the average military-connected child will experience 6 to 9 different schools during their K-12 education experience? This is a challenge for many of our military connected students. However, there are organizations and agencies such as the DAF School Liaison Program focused on the quality education of military connected students across the United States and Overseas.

With more than 1.1 million military connected students attending public institutions, issues surrounding quality education are a top priority for the Department of the Air Force. As a result, the North Dakota Purple Star Award is an incredible opportunity to help schools respond to the educational and social-emotional challenges military-connected children face to keep them on track to be college, workforce, and life-ready.

The North Dakota Purple Star Award for military-friendly schools recognizes schools that show a major commitment to serving students and families connected to our nation's armed forces. Applicants for the Purple Star Award are selected by The Purple Star Advisory Board which is formed by representatives of the North Dakota Department of Public Instruction, Minot and Grand Forks AFB, ND National Guard, school districts, school counselors and military-connected stakeholders.

This past school year at an assembly at a Minot AFB School, a slide stated, "We will make this place your home." This statement was powerful and moving and shows how essential our schools are in creating environments for our students and families to thrive. With this, I believe our Minot AFB Schools and other schools and districts are poised and well positioned to serve our military connected students.

The hope of the MAFB School Liaison Office, is that as we prepare for the upcoming 2023-2024 School Year, we see Purple Star Awardees in North Dakota.

S MAIN ST

MINOT, ND

Since America's conception, women have played an integral role in the military. Whether it was as nurses, spies, soldiers disguised as men, or officially recognized service members, women have always served vital, often unrecognized, roles in the nation's defense. The United States officially allowed women to join the military on June 12, 1948 with the passing of the Women's Armed Services Integration Act. After they had served in the Women's Army Corps, Navy Women's Reserve, Marine Corps Women's Reserve, and the Coast Guard Women Reserves under special legislation during WWII, the United States finally realized the importance of integrating females, who have historically made up about half of the US population, into the military. Section 502 of the act still excluded women from aircraft and Navy vessels that might engage in combat, but it was a step in the right direction towards a more modern, inclusive military. Information courtesy of: visitthecapitol.gov / cgc.edu

Workplace Safety for All of Us

'Workplace Safety Topics' - Maybe these 3 words put together in one sentence will make little sense to you. It is rare that we see workplace safety being given enough importance in our working lives. And that is why we talk about it! Workplace safety facts state that maintaining workplace safety is as important as maintaining safety at home. But why is safety at the workplace important? Think about it, we spend a major portion of our day at work so shouldn't we be assured of high levels of safety there? And how will you maintain those levels of safety if you don't know what you're supposed to maintain? That is why the following article will talk about some key safety tips and workplace safety topics that you should be looking into, if not already.

SAFETY TOPICS FOR THE WORKPLACE

For a start, take a look at the types of hazards that you may face in your office. Here is a list to help you out with determining what some of the workplace safety topics are.

SLIPS AND FALLS Slipping, tripping and falling over are some of the most common accidents that can happen in the workplace. Why do these happen? It is probably because there are no proper delegated places that are allotted for things. There might be loose wires that are lying on the floor which are like an open invitation for falls. Along with that if there are no storage places for personal items such as briefcase and gym bags, then they will just be in the way and people will trip. Spills on the floor that are not cleaned can cause slips, so also the negligence of putting up signs that indicate when floors have been mopped can lead to the same.

There needs to be strict instructions given that informs employees to keep things in their delegated places and not keep them lying around. Also, if anyone sees any spills they need to inform the maintenance personnel and get them cleaned. There needs to be further instructions given like workplace safety slogans put up that tells employees to maintain certain decorum and make sure that their drawers and the like are kept properly closed in order to prevent anyone crashing against them and falling.

of the electrical appliances has to be of primary concern for the matter of electrical safety. Too many wires plugged into one socket can lead to short circuits, frayed wires, and electric shocks become common place when there is no standard maintenance involved. That is why all employees need to be informed as part of workplace safety topics for meetings that they need to constantly be aware of the machines that they are using and if they find any problem with them, even if it is any doubt, they should inform the concerned personnel. Along with that there need to be strict instructions given that there will be no inclusion of foods and drinks around the machines. Food and liquid spills can cause the malfunction to happen faster and put all the employees at risk. This could even lead to fires taking place, making this one of the most useful of workplace safety tips.

FIRE SAFETY

Fires might happen either due to negligence or due to a genuine problem. In case it is caused by negligence then the employees need to be given proper instructions on how to maintain fire safety (taking care of electrical appliances and wiring). In case of a fire, all employees should employees have had an opportunity to see and memorize them. Taking these precautionary steps along with workshops held on how to prevent and deal with fires will make the office a much safer place.

ERGONOMICS AT WORK

Ergonomic in the workplace are an essential component of office life. It is not necessary that only physical factors like fire and tripping need to be cared for - the office structure and the arrangement of the different components in the office are equally important. The chair on which the employees sit, the brightness of their computer screen, the lighting, the frequency of breaks and other external factors like noise etc. have a direct effect on the performance of the employees. That is why ergonomics becomes so important.

These are some of the key workplace safety topics that you should not ignore at any cost. The maintenance of these will ensure not only the safety of the employees, but will also make them more efficient, which is ultimately all in favor of the company's progress.

PORTABLE LADDER SAFETY

Twice as many falls occur stepping down compared to going up ladders. The main cause of falls from straight and extension ladders is sliding of the ladder base. For self-supported ladders or stepladders, the main cause is tipping sideways. Just remember that many workers carrying ladders hurt their backs, as well. If possible, have two people carry ladders.

ELECTRICITY MALFUNCTION

Where there are so many machines present, there is always the danger of electrical malfunction happening. Regular checkups and maintenance
