North Dakota winters will make you mellow

There are lots of protests going on in the streets of America. Not many here in North Dakota. Probably because wind chills of 50 below zero and colder tend to mellow out the hot heads. I woke up this morning and it was cold. How cold was it? On the way to work I met a witch and a well digger and both claimed to have put on added layers of clothing. (If that went by you, that's okay) No protesters, though. During North Dakota winters, folks tend to do their bitching inside in small groups, usually, over coffee until later in the day.

It's kind of peaceful with the government shutdown. Now if they would shutdown the national news coverage of the government shutdown, we could all have some peace and some quiet. I liked the comment from the Native on Social Media who said that while the government was shut down he refused to use his "government name" and would answer only to his "Indian name." I loved it.

The big national uproar this chilly a.m. was over whether or not President Trump would give the traditional State of the Union address before the government reopens and whether he would do it from the House of Representatives or from a cardboard box under the George Washington Bridge. Here's some news for the leaders of this country. Most Americans know what the state of their union is. The question on their minds is why can't any of the people who took an oath to serve the best interests of the country, as a whole, manage to get anything done?

TRACKS IN THE SAND KEN BEAUCHAMP

Here's another crazy thought I had. If the government is shutdown, why is it still collecting taxes from citizens? If you go down to the cafe for breakfast and they aren't serving breakfast, you don't leave money on the table and go home hungry. Everyone is getting a break in the action here except the working people. Can you give me a big "AMEN!" for democracy?

Speaking of crazy thoughts. If all those caravan marchers from the central and southern Americas had to march across something like North Dakota presented this morning, how many would there be? They wouldn't be wearing sandals, I'll tell you that. Perhaps, instead of an immigration program we should create an exchange program. For every person who comes North, we get to send one south. It might also be a great way to redistribute wealth, sort of the The Great Loop of Prosperity. Poor people in, rich people out. It is probably way too simple to consider.

If you are among the single digit class which controls over 90 percent of the world wealth, you are set. If you are among the percentage sharing the meager leftovers and have any money to invest, let me make a suggestion. Given the direction things are going, here and other places, you might be wise to invest in bullets, anti-depressants and religion, although I'd not know what order to place those in. It might depend on where you're located.

We can count ourselves lucky here. Or maybe I should say our politicians should consider themselves lucky here. In most countries, a government shut down usually means the military has taken over, killed all the politicians and intellectuals and hit the reset button. They hand the government over to the uneducated and the unwashed who are armed only with common sense and the message they'd best do better. "Or else" having once again been established.

On a brighter note, politics and winter have something in common. Both are seasonal but somehow seem to last forever when they are the most disagreeable. Which reminds me of a story.

An old country boy was walking down the road and ran into another who was obviously lost. The country boy offered to show the lost man his way and along the journey they passed a house with a pack of dogs sitting on their haunches in the yard howling for all they were worth.

The lost man was curious and asked what breed of dogs they were. The country boy explained they were political dogs, which begged the question of "why that?"

The country boy explained the name came from the fact that all they were good for was to sit on their asses, make a lot of noise and expect to be fed. *My apologies to anyone offended, including dogs.

I have to think the smartest man produced in America in the last 50 years was Rodney King, an African American man who was severely beaten by California police and awarded millions in a lawsuit. For, it was he, who said, "Can't we all just get along?" Nope!

Laughs and music at Beulah Concert Series

By DANIEL ARENS

Combining comedy and music together, one upcoming performance is sure to draw out a large variety of people with a large variety of entertainment.

"The Funniest Night" features Todd Oliver and his friends. These friends are composed of the talking dog Irving and the family of Pops, Miss Lilly and Joey, since Oliver is a ventriloquist in addition to a comedian and musician.

This event is the third of the four concerts making up the annual Hazen Concert Series performances for the 2018-19 year. Despite the organization's name, this upcoming show will actually be held at the Beulah Middle School theater at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 12.

Oliver grew up loving dogs, ventriloquism and rock n' roll music. As a young boy he studied piano, guitar, voice and ventriloquism. Along the way he created some wooden head characters, Pops, Miss Lilly and Joey and began performing around the world.

Oliver's show has been featured on David Letterman, Jay Leno and Craig Ferguson's late shows, as well as "The Today Show", episodes of "Walker Texas Ranger" and "America's Got Talent".

This show is sure to bring lots of laughs for you and your whole family.

Tickets can be bought at the door, with $40 for adult and $10 for students. The tickets are good not just for this show, but any remaining performances put on by the Hazen, Dickinson or Watford City Concert Series groups this year.
