HEALTHY HAPPENINGS

FEBRUARY IS ND CHILD PASSENGER SAFETY MONTH
 For your child's safety, the North Dakota Department of Health offers the following recommendations. Select a car seat based on your child's age, size development and maturity. Weight and height information will be on labels attached to the car seat and in the instruction manual. Register your car seat, check for recalls and monitor the expiration date of the seat. Secure your child in the seat snugly, following the car seat instructions. Install the seat tightly in your vehicle using the seat belt or lower anchors and tether (LATCH) system. Follow the car seat instructions and vehicle owner's manual.

CCCHC BEULAH CLINIC - CONSTRUCTION UPDATE
 Temporary Relocation of Patient Entrances. The main entrance for patient visits at Coal Country Community Health Center - Beulah Clinic will be the southside vestibule. Please use this entrance for all services except Physical Therapy. Patient's needing Physical Therapy, will park and enter the facility from the southeast entrance, enter the parking area from 12th St NW.

EARN YOUR NURSING DEGREE IN HAZEN
 BSC Practical Nursing (LPN) Program is offered right here at Sakakawea Medical Center and allows individuals to achieve a personal career goal through non-traditional means. The program eliminates the need for students to travel away from home to obtain a career in nursing and offers small class size, reasonable tuition and on-site instructors. Interested applicants should contact Lacey at (701)748-7286 for more information.

HEALTHY TIDBIT
 Cooking with a cast iron skillet can leach iron into your food and help to prevent iron deficiency. Cooking foods longer and using acidic ingredients, such as vinegar and tomatoes, maximizes the amount of iron added to the cooking. For example, the amount of iron in 3 ounces of spaghetti sauce increases nearly tenfold after cooking in cast iron, due to the sauce's acid content.

Terrifying the citizens is not government's first job

Well, he did it. President Trump stuck his tongue on the flagpole. I mean he declared a national emergency to find the cash to build a bolder barrier when Congress wouldn't approve the money to do it. All hell would have broken loose if that condition hadn't already existed. The president acting on a triple dog dare was hardly surprising. Once again our government has proven that it answers to itself and not the people, at least not the segment of people who don't stand around and blow off at the mouth day and night.

On the matter of money, if you want to make some, let me suggest you invest in anything to deal with fear, anxiety, stress, depression and any lesser mental strains of illness. The pharmacy companies are getting rich. The medical profession is following suit. The church community also offers solutions to these issues for a small gift, or greater. Everyone is going to the heart of the nation's affliction and it is in our heads. Folks, inserting things like fear and anxiety and worse into the population is not a good governing force. Wonder why we have epidemic mental illness, alcoholism and drug addiction? Wonder why the United States consumes 80 percent of the painkillers gobbled up by the world?

Well, we have met the enemy and it is us, or our government, as a better description of source.

Democrat versus Republican politics has taken on the aura and the aroma of a really dirty divorce. One where the attorneys are working harder to build their personal reputations than they are at getting a marriage concluded without any blood on the floor.

These politicians can't negotiate or legislate and they sure as heck won't stipulate to anything. I doubt they could agree that the moon isn't blue 99 percent of the time. America has become the perfect example of the disenfranchised cottage, which would make for a great movie, if we could find anyone of sound mind to write a script.

The very first "Make America Great Again" campaign goes back several centuries to the days when Europeans fleeing the unhappiness of where they were calling home sailed on ships to what is now this country.

The native people here had spears and arrows with which to fight battles for supremacy with folks armed with guns and cannons. Now it's reversed. This country has the most powerful military in the world (supposedly, though I fear we'd have to fight to prove it) and we're facing off with immigrants who don't even have any spears and arrows. Lots of children and not much more. And we're not being any more successful at stemming the tide of incoming people than the early Natives did.

If you aren't worrying about the country and the government and our overall future, you might need to see someone, sort of get back into touch with reality. The government has lost the trust and respect of too much of the population, forget those "bases" you hear about, the people loyal to the party no matter what. A better thought is the question, "who will the country rally behind if we have a real time of national emergency and crisis? The last time this country went to war, this divided, was the Civil War and we all know how destructive that was and the nation still hasn't recovered from it. I don't think it is being overly dramatic to say that we are more vulnerable than at any time in history, given that our major enemies, Russia, China, North Korea, Iran and others to be named later, are all nuclear nations. And, standing with us, nothing all that comforting to me. Nuclear aside, it's questionable if we have the military force or could muster the force to win a conventional challenge worldwide.

Now I've gone and done it. Ran off at the mouth and made people feel bad. However, for a small gift, to be named later, I will tell you a bunch of happy stuff and show you how to use it to ignore all the bad stuff. And, if that doesn't work, you can blame yourself because you didn't try hard enough.

A friend was lecturing me about selling my soul to the devil. I thought about that and responded that I doubted the devil wanted to spend good treasure for my soul when there are so many politicians on the market. And, if you can buy them, you pretty much own it all, or do you not?

We have all kinds of people suing the drug companies for making a nation of drug addicts. Why not go after the government for creating all the fear and stress, anxiety, etc. that makes people crave an escape route? It starts the first day you enter the first level of school, which gets younger all the time. It's a hard task finding that approval for a "good life." Get back devil, I'm preachin' and politician' today. Forgive me.

Wolff named reserve champion

By KATE JOHNSON

Shane Wolff, Golden Valley, has been attending auctions and sale events since before he can remember. Wolff was recently named reserve champion at the Greater Midwest Livestock Auctioneering Championship.

Wolff works for the Stockmen's Livestock out of Dickinson and has his own family business, Wolff Auctioneers. Wolff is a second generation auctioneer and grew up watching his father, Armon Wolff, set the auctioneer bar fairly high.

Armon was a runner-up at the World Livestock Auctioneering Championship in 1979 and it was he who started Wolff Auctioneers – the family business in 1964.

The business continues to be family operated with Wolff's wife, Marsha and daughter, Paula Jo Wanner both invested in the business.

Competing as an auctioneer is something Wolff does because of his passion for it. He has dedicated a lifetime to learning the craft of auctioning — working on his rhythm and clarity. Wolff has competed in several competitions prior to his recent win; a 6th place being his highest finish in 2014 and qualified for World Livestock Auctioneer Championship in 2011 and 2012.

The Greater Midwest Livestock Auctioneering Championship is set at a real auction. During the auction the auctioneers are judged by five judges and scored in five different categories.

The categories are: voice (bid calling), salesmanship, knowledge of the livestock, bid catching ability, and whether or not they would hire the auctioneer.

While the family business is centered around land and machinery auctions, this competition is focused on livestock.

Wolff said that he thought he may have a chance at placing top five — which was his goal — and nothing can ever be won if you don't give it a try. With a laugh Wolff said he might have been the oldest auctioneer in the competition but he felt it was his experience that pushed him to finish top three.

"It was an honor to be in the top three," said Wolff.

The championship is open for anyone to enter. Tim Yoder from Georgia was named champion of the competition and Nick Caspers, Bismarck, who also works for Wolff Auctioneers also placed top three in the competition.

Although this year's group of competitors was smaller than other years because of the weather, Wolff said the 17 auctioneers competing were tough, talented competitors.

Wolff said he had to thank Stockmens, "I credit a lot to Stockmens Livestock and the experience they've given me," said Wolff.

Being an auctioneer your job is to make the best sale for the seller. "You got to focus on doing your best job for the seller — at all times — and never forget why you're up there; you have to represent the cattle as best you can...and without wasting time," said Wolff.

Even though all preparations have been studied and made prior to the competition, Wolff said the podium is still nerve racking and what you practiced shoots out the window.

From sitting at auctions as a five year-old and entering into auctioneer school as a young 19 year-old Wolff said the most important thing an auctioneer can do is be themselves. "Always be yourself up there and do your own thing," said Wolff.

His goal was to make it to top five at the Greater Midwest competition. Wolff said he about hit the floor when they announced he was reserve champion.

He earned a belt buckle

Top three in the Greater Midwest Livestock Auctioneering Championship: Nick Caspers, Bismarck; Tim Yoder, Georgia; and Shane Wolff, Golden Valley.

with his title — which the buckle symbolizes so much more than one competition.

Wolff said the buckle represents the dedication he has made to auctioneering, but also that when a person puts their heart and soul into something, eventually something good will come of it.

Wolff said this isn't a buckle that will be kept on a shelf but worn with pride for his unwavering effort to keep pursuing his dreams.

Shane Wolff received this belt buckle for his finish at the Greater Midwest Livestock Auctioneering Championship. He said it is something he will cherish.
