Yes, they have a name for all your conditions

Needing to talk some business, I walked into a local alcohol dispensary last week. I stopped in the doorway and looked around the room and assessed the crowd. One guy that morning. It's an old habit developed and carried over from my army days. The medical world calls it "hyper vigilance," simply stated that one tends to be overly cautious and watchful of one's surroundings and environment. It was something that always has and still does drive my first wife to wonder, "Do you always have to stop and study everything?"

Well, yes I do. So, I was watching television (unlike the Internet you can believe everything you hear on television -Yuck, Yuck, Yuck!). When I heard a medical person describe my condition and give it a name, I called that woman to say, "See there." She said she was so happy, because all those hyper vigilant years spent together she'd just thought I was nuts. That's what she said. The only treatment for it may be to learn to simply close one's eyes and tend to mind one's own business more and hope anything that's planned doesn't involve you. That's what I got for buying her books and sending her to school.

Since I don't drink alcohol these days, I don't visit the dispensary much. I've noticed from my occasional visits to these business places they don't have the same aroma the old places of my youth had. There is no aroma of stale smoke, stale beer and stale urine drifting forth to tell you your destination was near and identifying itself. I think nowadays you can buy soap and manly scents that give you that thrill women love. Those over 85, perhaps, just to perhaps qualify that guess.

How well I still remember those smells of yesteryear, along with the click, click of pool balls. Yup! You knew you were entering "man country." My personal favorites were those located downstairs, the basement bars and pool halls. Basements used to be favored locations for barber shops, too, as I recall. That would be back when you never heard the words, "How do you like my hair? I just had it styled."

Well, times do change and men get their hair styled and they have bars where you feel safe drinking out of a glass. I was just now remembering being in a place where a fight broke out between two ladies and they were cleaning up the blood on the floor with a mop after. It's worth noting this happened in an up-scale joint where it was harder to control the clientele. Ruffians would drift in from time to time. Let me point out that having seen one woman almost remove the breasts of another with a broken beer glass public breast-feeding doesn't warrant much shock from me.

A younger friend I was talking with about the olden times, said what killed basement saloons and pool rooms was that old guys don't do stairs and chair lifts cost money, you know. Hey, our mothers show up in all of us at some time. He went on to say that the only way old guys would see closing time is if bartenders started making wake-up calls at midnight so they could get up and get down there for the final curtain call. Mickey Gilley sang that the girls all get prettier at closing time. Again, in the old days, you could drink on the north side of the Missouri River, then drive across the Garrison Dam and everything had an extra hour to just get better. If you worked your way through the line of small saloons along the way you could actually gain the whole hour and not miss a minute anywhere. I knew guys who were always late for work but never late for Pick City, which sat right on the edge of the time line. Hey, without priorities a plan is just a dream. When you got an extra hour to booze, that was the stuff plans are made of! Say what you will or won't about varying time zones but two closing times in one night are better than one.

I don't remember my mother ever going into a bar, not even to get me out. Friday nights, her and Dad would share a quart of beer while she shaved him. A ritual, I guess. When I was younger I had a drug problem, which I blame on my mother, although I can't blame her for the booze. Yep, she drug me to school and drug me to work. She pretty much drug me where ever I wouldn't walk. I'm still trying to break the addiction of getting up every day and heading to the job. "I blame you, Mom. You hear! This one's on you!" Yes, just another responsibility pusher, eager to hook another innocent generation.

These days most everywhere smells cleaner and healthier. Character and color are gone. You can feel okay about drinking out of a glass in any place. Gone are the days when the bartender would wash a glass to pour your whiskey in and dry it on his shirt front. Okay, where did they dry the glass you had your last drink from? Don't worry. The only thing better for killing germs than that pine disinfectant in the hospitals is reputable whiskey. Okay! Tell me about the last person you know who got an infection and died from it after spending a night drinking whiskey in a saloon. I rest my case.

When I was married hardly a day went by that my wife didn't note, "It's easier and easier to see just how it was you got the way you are!"

"If you're talking about 'married' it's probably because I missed that lecture in school," I'd reply.

I think she muttered the words, "you're disgusting" more than any other woman in history but then she likely never had the chance to compare me to an old time basement saloon. Which still wouldn't have made me a rose.

Greatest honor for greatest service

By DANIEL ARENS

One man at the Knife River Care Center (KRCC) in Beulah has lived a long life, filled with events and opportunities.

Few of those experiences, however, can match his brief period serving his country overseas.

Albert Aanderud spent two years in the United States Army. During that time, in the late 1950s, he was stationed in Germany, where he served in the peacetime following the Second World War.

"He had a good time there," Albert's wife Adeline said. He remained in Germany until he came at Christmastime under an initiative called "Operation Santa Claus".

During a special ceremony March 8, American Legion Clark Grosz Post 189 members Bobby Neuberger and George Reichenberg presented Albert with a plaque honoring his service to his country at his room at KRCC. Adeline, as well as Albert's son Wade and his wife Barb, were in attendance for the special occasion.

Neuberger and Reichenberg spoke with the family and offered prayers for Albert as well as giving him the plaque. Neuberger said this ceremony for veterans is the most important things Legion members can do.
