TRACKS IN THE SAND

KEN BEAUCHAMP

I guess you should pay for great wisdom

Paying people to study and report on the obvious must be essential to growing the economy. Otherwise, it makes no sense at all. For instance!

Every day I read something or hear it somewhere. Old people fall more than younger people. I'm not sure how they came to that conclusion. Did they follow some young people and some older people around and just tally the number of dives? I'm sure it has some truly scientific basis and is essential to know, much like whether space has "black holes" or not.

Here's what I think, since I have lived long enough to be a Native elder and an old white guy. The reason older people fall more is because they don't listen to people who warn that older people tend to fall down more. Let me say, I'm not so sure about that falling part, but absolutely sure about the not listening part, partially due to bad ears and maybe more to bad attitude.

I thought it over long and carefully, and I concluded, with some supporting testimony from people who knew me when I was young, that I actually fell down a lot more when I was young than I do these days, when hip doctors follow me around just waiting for my fall.

Naturally, you ask if the reason I fell was due to my being clumsy. No. In fact, I was quite agile for a fat guy. I fell down more because I tended to be drunk a lot. Drunks fall down. That's why a drunk in a cast never has to explain to everyone what happened. You fell down. Everyone expects it. You don't need a study for that. Just a note. The only times I seriously hurt myself have happened since I've been sober. The moral of which might be that, yes, you can fix drunk but you can't fix stupid. Thank me; I just saved you a lot of trouble needing to point that out for me.

While it seems the government spends lots of money worrying about elderly folks falling, they have taken no action to add some things to a list of "controlled substances" that endanger older people. Medications are closely monitored. Can't have any old timers spaced out and falling down. Yet you can buy a stepping stool or any of a variety of ladders with no controls at all. Maybe you should get carded if you want to buy a ladder or other climbing device to prove you're not "too old." And don't get me started on stairs.

Yes, stairs are the enemy, the inclining Devil of the elderly. Every night, when I sit down to relax in front of my television, up pops a commercial with an old person lying at the foot of the stairs whining, "Help, I've fallen and I can't get up." Or they've fallen in the shower because they haven't invested in a unit that doesn't require stepping up three inches to enter. And bathtubs! More deadly than Cobras in heat. Yet there appears to be no real epidemic of old people turning into floaters in their bathtubs. Lots of stories though about young people dying of drug overdoses from drugs, controlled and otherwise. Then we all ask what would drive a young person to take their life? Probably the worry about all the bad stuff that happens when you get old. I don't know but one could suppose the thought of getting old, falling down the stairs where you live alone and being eaten by rats could make one say, "Oh, the hell with it." Damn, ain't life uplifting. I bet every night or day, some perfectly well functioning older person sees those commercials and begins to develop anxiety and then depression. Remember, all of that, like being drunk, is fixable. Getting the root cause stopped, maybe not because someone is making money off promoting cause, effect and treatment. There's way more money in treating dysfunction than in curing it.

So, stop worrying me with bad stuff! I don't care. Caring about all the world's woes is not and was never intended to be an end-of-life issue.

However, on the political front. A study I read about just today indicates that hugs are good for the nervous system and attitude. I was never a hugger until I began getting sober and some hugging still makes me nervous depending on whom is involved. If I ever get in trouble for hugging, my defense is going to be "Judge, I blame it on sobriety." I did hang onto a lot of drunks in the old days but I don't think it was hugging - more a matter of trying to help another human being in danger of falling down.

So, you can see why old Joe Biden is the calmest of the Democratic presidential hopefuls and likely has the best attitude. At his age he should remember that pride goes before a fall, which could happen if you invite yourself to hug the wrong person.

New leaders revitalize jam sessions

BY DANIEL ARENS

Over the last few years, there have been questions about whether Hazen's monthly jam sessions would continue into the future. Smaller attendance at some of the sessions, as well as the decision by Ron Crowley to step down from the leadership role after 2018, made these questions grow.

However, for many performers and local residents, the jam sessions have filled a special and significant role in the community for 18 years. As a result, one family decided to take up the charge, keeping the sessions going and leading the event into the future.

The Ost family have been longtime performers in and supporters of the jam session. Gilbert Ost has been performing throughout the jam sessions' history, and that enthusiasm passed on to his children as well.

Siblings Cary Ost and Linda Eslinger, together with their spouses Ava Ost and Mike Eslinger, and with support from their parents Gilbert and Violet, will now work together to ensure the jam session remains a success into the future.

"It's going to be a family thing," Cary said. "We were told last year was its 18th year, and they were looking for someone to host it for 2019. We felt it was important for the community, and we thought we could do it."

The jam sessions bring in talent from Hazen, Beulah and around the area, and from as far away as Bismarck and Dickinson, to perform a variety of musical pieces for the community and region. There isn't a specific list of who shows up; instead, musicians who are available come out to Hazen City Hall the first Sunday of each month May-October and perform together.

"We want to invite any singers and musicians that have performed in the past to come and be part of it," Cary said, adding his hope that the jam session can continue to demonstrate the talents and abilities of performers who have been dedicated to the event throughout the years.

Cary also invited anyone interested in doing a fundraiser or feed to partner with the jam sessions, offering food in conjunction with the performances.

The Ost family plans to lead the event into the future as long as support remains for the sessions to continue. The concerts will continue to be held at Hazen City Hall, starting at 6 p.m.

Cary said the plan is for all the performances to be on the first Sunday of each month, saying that among the family they are sure someone can be available for each performance even if the others have conflicts. In the past, the concerts were occasionally rescheduled to other dates, but Cary said he wants to give the performers consistency in knowing the date, time and location won't change.

The first jam session of 2019 will be held May 5 at 6 p.m. The event will last about two hours, with a break in the middle and with cookies and coffee available.

Cary praised Crowley for his role in leading the jam session over the last few years, and said he hopes the community will continue to come out and enjoy the event.

"We've always enjoyed being part of it and we just felt it was important to this community to keep it going," he said.
