Life well-lived with fingers to spare!

Given the motherly hysteria that prevailed in the great era of the 1950's, it is amazing that a generation of children with enough digits to do more than pick a nose survived the risks and trials. The Fourth of July fireworks were to mothers what BB guns were to Christmas. Sure s heck, bet your butt, something bad was bound to happen to any child that had exited the womb and was big enough to enjoy some fun.

TRACKS IN THE SAND KEN BEAUCHAMP

Unless, of course, the child was underhanded and sneaky, either of which could well have been the middle name of 99 per cent of children raised in that wonderful era, when America was great. Unless you were a kid with a yearning to blast off hefty fireworks but were instead hovered over by a mother. One who was sure with every passing Fourth that her most wild child would be forever known as as "Nine, possibly"Eight or even Seven Finger so-and so", as in "Nine Finger Bob".

Myself, I suffered a few blast bruises and some minor burns but lost not a single pinky. Not that the loss of s few fingers would have hampered my newspaper career that much, 'cause typing with one finger has always been faster than my mind works anyway. My mouth is a lot faster than my fingers and has gotten we into way more trouble.

We all know that there is nothing that will drive a kid into seeking larger, more powder laden fireworks than a constant harping by a beloved, pain in the keester mother ranting "you'll blow your fingers off with them big firecrackers!" You notice they now have celebration of Christmas in July. It is no accident. It allows mothers to practice up, get suited up and be ready for the "big game" in December. Yes, December, the month of Christmas, when a child is so filled with fear and anticipation that a mother couldn't pound a pin up their kid;s butt with a jackhammer.

Have you ever wondered why, after mother's see how their kids ignore their pleading and good advice, why they even bother with the "six talk", which I'm not sure comes under the "blowing things up" category or not".

It's a lifetime ago that I was coming up in life. But, while we didn't have dope dealers to tempt us, we did have sleazy fireworks dealers and, later on, in most cases, booze bootleggers. Normally, these were the same people-an older relative or in the case of some of us, older co-workers. I learned my first lesson in the seducing of an elected official from an older co-worker. Note" No rules were broken or statutes violated in that action. There was some damage to a door panel in the front seat of a nearly new Plymouth. But not that much. I don't know it the Devil was wearing a blue dress, but I think high heels.

I guess it is true. You shoot BB buns and big firecrackers and drink beer when you should be getting weaned off Kool Aid and you grow up to be a degenerate. Maybe that's why so many women, mothers, I assume, read this .I'm trying to imagine what my "pop Up" book for kids will look like.

My mom is probably sitting in Heaven, visiting with the other moms, and being an apologist for her only son by saying, "Hey, I don't know why his life has been spared so many times. Maybe the Boss is having a really hard time finding bad examples for the people down there anymore. I don't know! But, he didn't learn it from me. Believe me. Momma tried! But, I'm sure you'll like him once you get to know him." And under her breath, "I'm gonna so beat that kid with my broom...."

By the time you read this, someone will have, no doubt, blown something up or something off. That's not counting the Ayatollah or the President. Or that North Korean kid. Hopefully, where the rubber meets the road here, is not the same point where youthful meets senility. AS for America, our president has proven he's a lover not a fighter. Blame it on his age. He and I are both 72. Hey, a guy tends to repeat himself!

Our president. He;s lucky to have a good balance. The hookers lift him up, The press drags him down. It tends to keep his self-esteem on a level and so far, less likely to shoot any weapons at anyone. Which reminds me of some advice my mom always gave me as a boy and even later in life: "Don't bite off more than you can chew. You'll get your block knocked off!"

Hey, even your mom gets it right once in a while.!

Balloon fun in Stanton

BY DANIEL ARENS

While it seems storks are the favored means of aerial transportation for baby elephants, several eggs found themselves an alternative means of flying through the sky.

Around 20 kids came out to the Stanton Public Library June 19 for the Lunar Balloon Launch event. The launch featured kids placing an egg in the center of a group of balloons, hoping their egg would be one of the lucky ones to survive its landing.

Children had the opportunity to build their own balloon transport before witnessing the launch. The event proved a fun and exciting time for all who came out.

This "Lunar Balloon Launch" fits in with the space theme libraries all around the United States are celebrating this summer in their reading programs. Nancy Miller, Stanton Public Library director, said she is looking at doing a stargazing event later on this month.

Plan ahead – Take responsibility for your safety and that of your family!

- A basement is safest, preferably under a sturdy table or workbench. If you don't have a basement, go to a small interior room - like a closet or bathroom - with no windows. Keep as many walls as possible between you and the outdoors.
- If you do not have a basement, make arrangements with a relative or neighbor, or plan to use a public shelter.
- Get out of vehicles and mobile homes. If no other shelter is available, lie down outside and cover the back of your head and neck with your hands.
- Be alert for possible flooding.

How it works: ND rural REAP Zones

By DIANE NEWBERRY

Large swaths of North Dakota have been officially designated by the federal government as “REAP” zones, or “Rural Economic Area Partnership” Zones. Only North Dakota, New York and Vermont have land with this designation, and being designated as a REAP Zone has helped areas of North Dakota secure funding for various projects over the years.

In 1995 that two zones in North Dakota were initially designated as REAP Zones in the southwestern and north-central regions. According to the Reap Investment Fund, these two areas, as well as the subsequent areas chosen in New York and Vermont, were not only rural, but faced other unique challenges as well.

“(The zones) were created to address critical issues related to out-migration, constraints in economic activity and growth, low density settlement patterns, stagnant or declining employment and isolation that led to disconnection from markets, suppliers and centers of information and finance,” the Reap Investment Fund’s website reads.

The Southwest REAP zone includes Adams, Billings, Bowman, Dunn, Golden Valley, Hettinger, Slope and Stark Counties as well as part of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation. The second zone in the state, CONAC (Center of North America Coalition for Rural Development) includes Benson, Bottineau, McHenry, Pierce, Rolette and Towner counties as well as the Spirit Lake and Turtle Mountain reservations.

Over their existence, the zones have worked together, forming the Reap Investment Fund in 1999 to act as the non-profit arm of the designated zones, handling their funds on a regional level.

According to Sandy Shively, executive director of the North Central Planning Council, there is no longer a funding mechanism for REAP zones through the U.S. Department of Agriculture like there was when the zones were created, but when applying for funds for infrastructure projects, like the new sewer system in Dodge, there is sometimes a special set aside within grant programs for projects in REAP zones.

According to Tracey Miller, a KLJ Engineering and Planning employee working on the Dodge project, the first phase of the project is funded through a $300,000 USDA loan and a direct grant of $896,507. Being a part of the REAP zone, Miller said, was important to securing the money.

“They compete with a more limited group of applications,” Shively said.

However, REAP zone benefits do not just extend to government entities. In fact, according to Shively, much of the work the zones’ administration does today is working with small businesses through their micro-loan program.

Each zone runs a micro-loan program where they can lend up to $10,000 for business acquisition, development or expansion with 0 percent interest. Shively said this kind of loan can help a business owner fill in a gap in equity for a larger bank loan.

The USDA explains the REAP program as “a pilot concept for rural revitalization and community development,” and over the years, it has tackled projects ranging from a rural grocers’ initiative to a task group focused on childcare concerns to helping advertise and bolster locally grown food. REAP zones are described by the USDA as being primarily “citizen led,” and the citizens of rural North Dakota might have even more to contribute in the future.
