Farmers Union, volunteers aide community project

By KATE JOHNSON

Bagging pinto beans for the greater good. Mercer County Farmers Union and Farmers Union Insurance, Kandie Lindemann, partnered together with Great Plains Food Bank, Fargo to help provide food to local pantries.

A group of members and volunteers got together last week to scoop, bag and package up pinto beans that would be given to food pantries throughout Mercer County and many other communities in need.

Mercer County Farmers Union hosted a Youth Day and community project. Kids took part in a STEM project for kids. They were to design and build rain catchers that are set up at Riverside Park, which was followed by the community project of bagging pinto beans.

North Dakota Public Service Commissioner Randy Christmann also attended the event to help package up the beans.

Although the volunteers were few, Lindemann said she had her members and support of other local businesses to help make the Commissioner Randy Christmann also came to help with the project.

day successful. B'Dolce's Bakery provided them with lunch and Lignite Tire loaned a fork lift to the event so they could continue to package more pinto beans from the semi truck load they were given.

TRACKS IN THE SAND

KEN BEAUCHAMP

My, what a big shingle you have!

In olden times, the sign medical people hung outside to advertise their offices and services was commonly referred to as a "shingle:" a simple piece of wood engraved or painted with their message. I don't think the size of the shingle had much to do with anything beyond their vanity and the bragging rights from having a bigger shingle than their competitors.

Now I have no professional schooling that would lead me to need or even have a shingle. But, since I am a newspaperman, I am brimming over with opinions and a multitude of diagnosis of all sorts. Really! I'm great at figuring out what's wrong with other people and suggesting how they go about fixing themselves. This has lead some people to accuse me of thinking I know everything and am perfect, but that is not true. While a good number of the population believe that, I am not prepared to testify that it is so, although highly probable and scarcely impossible.

When I was married to my first wife and since, I was always great at knowing what was wrong with her and pointing it out along with a solution. One day, I remember her blowing up and screaming, "Your entire road of life is paved with bull crap (or a version thereof)!" I calmly soothed her and said, "Now, now, don't go and get yourself upset." At which point, I think she slipped completely off the deep end, and it may have been the time she ran into me with the car. I told that car story to a cop friend who thought a moment and said, "Well, Ken, sometimes you can find a victim but you can't find the crime."

People have challenged me by asking, "if you know so much, you must know what's wrong with yourself." I always reply, "The truth is I do know that. However, sharing it with you is not likely to make you feel more comfortable and relaxed and open. By the way, did you ever hear that cops can often find a victim but no crime?"

Over the years, the shingle profession has used a number of terms to reference the folks who walk through the doors beneath the sign. In kinder and gentler times, the word "disturbed" used to be applied regularly to those now referred to as mentally ill and or nuts.

While I was sitting here thinking about it, it occurred to me that folks these days have a lot to be justifiably disturbed about, to a degree where they become mentally ill, crazy or just plain, nuts. The term pressure, these days, has a list of preceding adjectives a mile long. Possibly highlighted by everyone's favorite- "political" pressure.

This made me ponder. What would politics look like if it were civil, not accusatory, nasty, just plain mean-spirited, mean and money grubbing? What if, what if, we awakened one morning and solutions had been found overnight for all the problems that divide us in America, and the political parties had to suddenly find value and support in the problems they solve and not those they create. Well, what if coyotes stopped chasing roadrunners? Where would all the fun be! What would the Republicans and Democrats do without their Acme Political kits?

What if we awakened in a country where skin color, religion and social standing didn't really matter and no one would be forced to lie anymore? I was watching an old western one evening. Famous child star of the 1940 movie, Shirley Temple, with lead man, Randolph Scott, was engaged with Natives in a western region of the United States. Like all movies of that time, they had some real Natives playing the masses but leading roles were White guys fixed up like Indians. No matter. But, sweet little Shirley, not a racist bone in her body was referring to Native women as "squaws." Quite common then and even still some areas. That and other words and actions offensive to Natives have not been struck in everyday life.

I told one of the ladies at the office about the movie and how the reference had been by both Shirley and a Native. The guy told her, "Squaw walk behind. Keep quiet." The lady I related it to said it was awful. I, on the other hand, suggested it might make a good marriage training film for some of the classes people have to take prior to marriage in some circumstances. Clean up the language a bit and it should be fine, don't you think? No, I'm guessing not. Although counseling, including marriage counseling, involves a lot of opinions, much like newspaper work, I am cautious about being a traveler in that area. One day, I mentioned to my former first wife that she might be surprised at the number of women who tell me they like reading this column. Two sure surprised me! Really, there are more.

Her reply was "What woman wouldn't feel better after experiencing that and realizing what a really stupid train wreck of a choice in men she might have made?"

What could I say? Other than "Walk behind and be quiet!"
