Not talking to people might be smarter

There's a lot of fussing about the void in personal contact brought about by social media. Well, it might be smarter if we don't talk to people, especially certain people. If I had to use social media, I would never be talking to a certain person. So, when a certain person invited me to take her out for lunch, what could I say? It would be rude to just say no. Maybe would be somewhat safe, but I've never been a maybe kind of guy. So, I found myself sitting across the table from my first (and favorite) wife.

Now there are things you just steer clear of in these sorts of "Red Button" potentially nuclear situations. Best to just eat and not speak. This woman hates sports, doesn't like the current weather, is so politically explosive to be spooky and has no interest in my many afflictions. But, you can't have dead air during a meal!

So, I thought I'd play it safe. Real safe. I decided to talk a little religion. I've made bigger miscalculations, but I don't recall when. Perhaps in an alcoholic fog, the throes of passion, or when I just wasn't listening. There's a lot less of the former than the latter. I don't think it will matter in how long I live.

Well, here's some free advice. Never repeat anything you heard a preacher say over a 30 dollar steak. I should have done what smart judges do. Just stick to the matters in front of you. Enjoy that steak!

But, I had to do it. So, I said that sometimes God doesn't give you what you want; he gives you what you need. Then, while I could still see out of the hole, I began digging faster adding, "I think that's what happened with you and I. God sent me what I needed." I was working on a compliment but it went bad, which is surprising how chilly it got in that booth. I think that steak froze for sure.

There I was. No where to go. Much like the rats in the burning dump ground, a memory of my youth. Sitting up, just waiting to get shot or ignite.

I proceeded to point out to her some factual history. I came from a long line of sole surviving sons. I needed sons to make sure the family name would carry on. She gave me four, counting the little boy we miscarried between sons one and two. They are grown with sons of their own. One apiece but that's good. Because I had to carry all the water is no reason they should.

Then she is fondling a steak knife, much like one she stuck me with once before, and snarled, "So, you didn't want me; you just needed me."

I quickly assured her it was nothing like that; that I both wanted and needed her. You can see this was going nowhere but downhill fast. She replied, "Oh, are the next 50 years of your life going to be dedicated to preaching now?" Sarcasm was dripping like barbeque sauce. I was more worried, at the moment, about Eternity than the next 50 years. I was really hoping to make it safely to the car. The parking lot offered more room to maneuver. And a cop might drive by.

"How's your baked potato," I asked, hoping to change the direction of the conversation. I can't say, not being a mind reader. But being a look reader, I thought she was thinking, "I should have stuffed a baked potato in his breathing tube when I was alone with him in the intensive care unit last time he pulled one of his stunts. You can never find any dry cat crap when you need it!"

Just today, I was talking about first wives with a friend of mine. I was explaining to him that the problem with divorce is that they don't offer the same closure as other "partings."

Somewhere in here you may get to where you might still want but you no longer need. So, then, in a fit of confusion brought on, possibly, from an incident of being without oxygen for too long, you might struggle deeper into confusion and blurt out, "I do want you. I don't need you!" And, you can see how this immediately clears up the earlier angst and plunges you deeper into the dump where the fires burn hottest and the best shooters surround you.

I seem to remember the lyrics of a song from the Sixties, my young manhood, that went something like, "I want you, I need you, I love you!" It was followed by a series of "oh, oh," style lyrics. Yep, love songs with a warning label.

I had a brother who died at age two years. He is my older brother. When I visit the small grave with flowers for him, I always say, "It ain't been easy without you, Sonny." He could have given me advice on women. Or, I could follow my own and keep my big mouth shut.

Add Some Cast to Your Autumn Blast

By Nick Simonson

Fall fishing can be as fast as the hunting on any given opener. From walleyes to smallmouth to late-season trout, adding a few quick casts to a day of hunting can produce a combination of memories from field to stream that aren't soon forgotten.

Actively feeding autumn fish provide great opportunities on the way back from a morning in the field, or a great evening pursuit after a day of walking in the uplands.

Knowing where some of the top fall prospects for fast fishing, such as walleyes, smallies, and trout will be and how to angle for them this time of year will help keep good times on the rise as the leaves begin to fall.

MOONLIGHT

WALLEYES

Fall is feeding time for walleyes in lakes and rivers. With the decrease in daylight, these predators will be after their prey earlier in the evenings and will have a voracious appetite in preparation for the coming lean seasons.

Additionally, cooler shallows will be more inviting to their efforts to inhale more energy than they expend.

Those key moments to seek out hungry walleyes will still be dawn and dusk, but any time around September and October's full moon is especially good.

Circle Sept. 12 and Oct. 13 on the calendar this year, as both full moons fall on the weekend, making for some very convenient fishing.

About half an hour before moonrise, be in place to cast to those prime areas, such as inflowing creeks, shallow structure, current breaks, funnels and other noted hot spots where predator and prey intersect and offer something a bit bigger in terms of baits in order to connect with aggressive 'eyes.

Stay under the glow of the full moon until the frenzy subsides – but be ready, it may take a few hours!

Larger jigs paired with bigger soft bodies like swim-baits that mimic minnows are a good starting point for finding fish in fall. Additionally, longer jerkbaits will catch the attention of foraging walleyes and offerings such as the Rapala Husky Jerk and X-Rap can pay off when they are seeking larger meals.

Live bait can help add to the action as well, especially if walleyes are chowing down on this season's set of fathead chubs, which can be found shallow in autumn. Match the hatch and get ready to catch some golden fall action.

TROUT IN THE SHALLOWS

As the cooler conditions of autumn take hold, the many deeper stocked trout lakes in North Dakota give up their summer stash of fat and feisty brown and rainbow trout which were planted for put-and-take fishing in late spring.

After a season of hiding deep in the colder waters adjacent to earthen dams or the middle of certain natural lakes which were supplied with these species, trout will take to the shallows in the coming weeks as water temperatures become more tolerable to them.

Being there to intercept can result in some of the fastest fishing of the year and adds a nice "cast" element to the blast of grouse, waterfowl or even pheasant hunting that most sportsmen are focused on in September and October.

It doesn't take much to connect with these slippery salmonids which are feeding on the last of the warm-weather bounty of insects and small baitfish, and a handful of spoons and spinners, along with the right presentation will trigger a bite from an autumn trout.

Find those stocked lakes with depths of 35 feet or more, then look for fish to be shallow. The later autumn gets, the easier it will be to find them from boat and from shore as weed lines begin to die off and casting areas in skinny water clear up.

Trout will be aggressive from mid-September until ice-up, so burn fast-moving lures like spinners and spoons, along with small crankbaits to connect with them, as they feed on the last of the flashy forage. Add a handful of jigs and curly-tailed grubs to the mix to round out a small tackle-box for fun fall trout fishing.

BROWN BASS ON THE BREAKS

Much as smallies will make those sporadic forays into the spring shallows after a day or two of warm weather in April or May, look for them to be moving between deep water and near-shore structure as autumn's oscillating weather patterns come in and out of the region.

They too will be targeting the last of the crayfish, aquatic insects and the baitfish moving around in the changing fall waters and will be driven to feed as they enter a near-dormant stage in winter where they hold deep along breaks and don't do much until ice-off.

After a day or two of high temperatures and sunny skies, start the search up in the shallows with summer presentations of tubes, jigs and soft plastics for small-mouth bass.

On those days where there's a shift and things are cooler, or in the post-frontal conditions following it, look a bit deeper and use more subtle presentations like a slowly worked soft plastic stick such as a Senko wacky rigged on a circle hook.

The classic float-n-fly combination consisting of a marabou jig rigged eight, ten, or fifteen feet or more beneath a slip float – depending on water clarity and fish location – works well on days with light breezes, as the movement of the surface causes the float to telegraph the subtle action to the materials which make up the lure.

This fall, with some simple tackle and insight into where the fish will be and how the changing environment affects them, adding some fins to the feathers from the field is a bit easier.

Take advantage of the diverse fishing opportunities that are often overlooked when many outdoorsmen are focused on the movement of a good bird dog or a flight of ducks coming into the decoys, and don't forget to add some cast to this autumn's blast for an even more exciting season.

Scam Alert: Work from home scams

Today's work world is vastly different than when Labor Day was first celebrated more than 130 years ago.

Today, more and more people are working from home for companies halfway around the country or even the globe. But with this new flexibility comes a new risk of falling victim to scammers looking to take advantage of people wanting to work from home.

The scams can promise work on medical billing, data entry or starting an online business, but they all require paying something up front. Once you start paying, the requests for more money for training never stop. In return, you get a lot of useless information or requests to recruit more people into the scheme.

There are genuine work-from-home jobs out there. The trick is knowing how to spot the real opportunities in a sea of empty – and costly – promises.

Research other people's experience. Try entering the company or promoter's name with the words "complaint," "reviews," or "scam" into a search engine. Read what others have to say. After all, it's your money on the line.

You also might try checking out a company with your local consumer protection agency, your state Attorney General, or the Better Business Bureau – not only where the company is located, but also where you live. These organizations can tell you whether they've gotten complaints about a particular work-at-home program. But remember: just because there aren't complaints doesn't mean the company is legitimate.

If you think you have fallen victim to a scam, call the AARP Fraud Watch Network Helpline at 877-908-3360 for guidance and support. For information about other scams, sign up for the AARP Fraud Watch Network at www.aarp.org/fraudwatch-network. You'll receive free email alerts with tips and resources to help you spot and avoid identity theft and fraud.
