RE-ELECT DWIGHT BERGER FOR COUNTY COMMISSIONER

When I was elected 4 years ago I had my suspicions about what was going on in Mercer County but I had no idea what I suspected had progressed to the stage it is at now. After I hired a lawyer to help me with the legal aspects, I went to work for the taxpayers of Mercer County. I finally presented a year with no tax increase for the county. Tax Valuations went up but the actual county tax levy didn't increase. Some of you think I am too radical, I may be, but I needed to be radical for a chosen few department heads to understand the meaning of the word NO.

I have had a real tough time convincing the same chosen few department heads that they work for the taxpayers, not the taxpayer working for them. We now have a jail facility double the size of the old one with no more beds filled than before, although staff has been increased. This whole expansion project is costing us roughly 3/4 of a million dollars a year. It is not hard for me to figure out why Mercer Counties net worth has decreased 1 million a year for the last 5 years. I have decided to run again to try to finish what I have started. I will continue to work towards the commissioners elected by the voters of Mercer County being held accountable for the shortages that are occurring in Mercer County.

We need to let the dog start wagging his tail not the tail wagging the dog. Department heads in Mercer County need to learn the difference between needs and wants. The days of wasteful spending by the leaders of Mercer County needs to STOP. Dwight Berger

Piling up of chores a grave solution

While time rolls on, the list of chores and things that need doing around the House of Misery seems to get longer and longer. When asked when I plan to get to some of these things, I have been replying, "I'm saving those things to do when I retire." Needless to say, though I will, it appears that I will never retire to face what fate awaits me at home because I just ain't brave enough for all that work. Leading, of course, to what I call a grave solution. In other words, I'll just die and leave it to the next convention of fools, excuse me, homeowner.

Now the House of Misery has been referred to as a lodge, old man cave and museum. It is complete with everything except a woman's touch. Okay, okay, there are some cabinet shelf linings. It was a moment of weakness. Really. I was recovering from being dead and didn't have the strength to resist the efforts of my caretaker. Hey, John Wayne would have done no better with Maureen O'hara. That fictional movie theme relationship is sort of a real thing in my life. Peaches and gunpowder.

I don't remember my dad doing a lot of domestic work. He didn't paint, or do windows or wallpaper. He didn't weed the garden, and while he would plant a tree, it was on its own from there on. He didn't sweep or scrub floors or wash dishes. In today's world, he would require quite a lengthy pre-nup agreement, one which would no doubt be a deal breaker at the start of negotiations. Luckily, there was my mother, and when God made her he not only broke the mold, he threw it away. One giant loss for mankind.

A friend once advised me that it is foolish to put much money into home improvements because you seldom recover the cost when you sell. I assume he was not talking about replacing a blown off roof. I failed to fully understand that until I woke up with a few years on my personal self and realized that putting much money into improving the looks or performance of that would be, in deed, a waste of money. While I might qualify as a one owner, I have been driven fairly hard, crashed a few times and could really use a full "body off" restoration. At a minimum, an Earl Scheib $29.95 paint job. And a new top. Definitely a new top. The running gear is pretty good and the seals don't leak. Yet.

I came from a line of generations that couldn't wait to leave home. Pack your bags after graduation; kiss the old folks goodbye and promise to send a post card. These days, it seems parents are having trouble getting kids out of the house and keeping them there. The news had a story recently about parents who sued to get their 30 year old son evicted from their home. Unless he's one heck of a handyman, I can assure you that he would have exited the House of Misery long before age 30. Lots of kids are big enough to leave home at 17, you know. I should have known I wouldn't be hanging around home for an extended period when my mom sent me to school at age four and a half.

"You'll be fine," she assured me, when putting me on the bus. "Just tell them you're small for your size." You'd have had to know my mom.

About this 30 year old who wouldn't leave. Consider him a problem like a pesky gopher in your garden. Stick the water hose in his hole and turn it on. When he runs out whack him with a broom and chase him away. No you don't kill him! Learned that from my mom. Just hose 'em and scare 'em off. Her wash and release program. The critter she'd been cursing and fussing about for weeks suddenly became an innocent little animal when he ran out soaking wet and snorting water. Kind of water boarded. Welcome to Guantanamo, gopher! Right. You'd have had to know my mom.

There's a lesson to be learned here. You should never work and work to make your home too comfortable and inviting. Not unless you are looking to attract company. You have guessed right. I am not. At my age, the choice of company, with the exception of a child, which will never happen, is limited. 1. Widows. 2. Divorced persons. 3. Spinsters who retain their high school librarian virginity cards. I'd probably need a government permit for an endangered species like that.

My son called the other day. My grandson comes to the house before and after school most days.

"Hey, your grandson is afraid to go in the house because there's a strange pickup in your driveway." And I thought it was only my oldest son who had those issues. I assured him it was just the garage guy who picked up my car and left his truck. You may have noticed that not many children choose to move in with their parents who are no longer married.

So, the House of Misery remains dark, unwelcoming and in growing need of repairs. I think I'll just continue to let it develop into a grave situation.

Seeing Spots

There's a compromise reached in every relationship. My wife loves to cruise on the open water and I love to fish, so much so that the idea of being on a boat without a rod in hand is what I imagine hell must be like. So while I manned the helm of the party boat as we moved up and down the river under the warmth of the newly-minted summer sun over the holiday weekend, my eyes shifted from the bouncing rod tip that telegraphed the motion of the firetiger crankbait clicking along the bottom to the side-scanning read-out on the depthfinder and then up to the water ahead of me. While trolling is perhaps my least favorite method of fishing, it did serve its purpose as I staked out a variety of spots to try in the coming days while I tracked the kids' whereabouts behind the chairs on the boat and watched for the swirling jetskis which were darting in between the increasing water traffic.

When it comes to angling technology, I wouldn't say I'm on the cutting edge. Sure, I have my share of depthfinders for both ice and open water, but they're nothing that would break anyone's bank or wow them in terms of features. My familiarity with some of the more recent options has been limited in part because I more often fish by sight and for species that require relatively less underwater vision, and because I enjoy at least the thought that I'm still utilizing that primitive spot in my brain my ancestors on the Norwegian coast utilized for hundreds of years to find fish with nothing more than a wooden boat. Plus, I figure we have enough screens in this world as it is.

Though with the installation of a new sort of screen on the boat, I have quickly become amazed and familiarized with the side scanning option in just a few trips. With each pass along the rising and falling sandbars of the river, the display pointed out deadfalls and humps and, often nearby, the yellow streaks and spots of small fish tucked out of the current behind them. Occasionally, during the compromise of the cruising/angling adventure, the bouncing rod would bend and pull with the weight of one of the small spots, and I'd add an eater walleye or sauger to the livewell, a nice bonus for a recreation-focused outing. Following the hook-up, I'd drop a marker on the GPS and turn back to see what the side-scan report was of the area we just covered, and that would provide the true win-win payout from the compromise on the cruise.

Sure enough, yellow arcs would be scattered up along the breakline, right about where the water dipped from eight to ten feet toward the speeding channel flowing in earnest against the eastern bank. On any other day, I'd anchor up and start tossing a jig, bumping it along the bottom, but as part of the compromise, I was content with a second pass and a continuation upstream into the next sunny bend of the flow, all the while tuning in and out to the music on the radio and watching the sun draw more boats to the river and recreationalists on the shoreline.

However, with each strike of a fish missed or landed, and each scattering of blips on the sonar caught in between my survey of the day's river miles covered, I made mental notes of landmarks and dropped the all important waypoint on the map to come back to in a time where I could be more dedicated to their exploration. With every encounter of the marks on the screen, I noted the shifts in flow, the shoreline structure that showed and held the fish below and the various bends and points that seemed to suggest where the next similar fish-holding location might be, figuring when there's less to compromise, I can devote more time to the spots I was seeing...in our outdoors.

The dots stand out on the dorsal fin of this sauger caught by the author on a cruise upriver where the fish were a bonus to pinpointing future fishing spots.

DAKOTA DATEBOOK: Dakota Zoo opening

WRITTEN BY MERRY HELM

June 3, 2020 — The Dakota Zoo in Bismarck opened its gates for the first time on this date in 1961.

The attraction originally began as a private business, and then a labor of love, on a 67-acre plot of land on what was then the north edge of the city. Marc and Betty Christianson operated the Christianson Farm, where they kept boarding kennels for domesticated animals like cats, dogs and horses. At a certain point, they also raised mink.

Friends and neighbors love of the Christiansons' love of animals and, over time, people began bringing injured animals and strays to the farm, because they knew Marc and Betty would know how to give them the care they needed.

As the number and variety of animals increased, the Christianson Farm started drawing curious visitors. And then more curious visitors. Finally, it got to the point where whole busloads of school children would show up.

The Marshal Bill Show on KFJR picked up on the phenomenon, and the publicity led people to consider the possibility of starting a zoo in the community. In 1958, 780 people signed a petition to establish the Dakota Zoo, and Marc Christianson took a proposal to the Bismarck Park Board.

Christianson's concept was of a zoo that would be self-supporting and would require no funding from the City of Bismarck. The late George Schaumberg, who was the director of Bismarck Parks and Recreation, got behind the idea, and the Park Board ended up setting aside 88 acres in Sertoma Park for establishing the attraction.

Marc Christianson and his crews used recycled and donated building materials for much of the initial construction, but certain projects came to fruition only because private citizens stepped in and helped.

When the Dakota Zoo opened to the public, it had 75 animals and 23 birds on about 15 acres of developed land. In that first year alone, some 40,000 people visited, each paying an admission fee of 10 cents.

Attitude . . . By Charles Swindoll

"The longer I live, the more I realize the impact of attitude on life. Attitude, to me, is more important than facts. It is more important than the past, than education, than money, than circumstances, than failures, than successes, than what other people think, say or do. It is more important than appearance, giftedness or skill. It will make or break a company ... a church ... a home. The remarkable thing is we have a choice every day regarding the attitude we embrace for that day. We cannot change our past ... we cannot change the fact that people will act in a certain way. We cannot change the inevitable. The only thing we can do is play the one string we have, and that is our attitude... I am convinced that life is 10% what happens to me and 90% how I react to it. And so it is with you ... we are in charge of our Attitudes"
