fires involving grills or other outdoor cooking equipment occurred between 2014 and 2018. Of those, 3,900 were structure fires.

July is the peak month for grilling-related fires. It's also National Grilling Month.

As we move cooking outdoors, I have a true/ false quiz for you based on information from the NFPA.

True/false. You never should leave your grill unattended.

True/false. You should keep children and pets at least 3 feet away from the grill.

True/false. You should position your grill away from your home, deck railings and under overhanging branches. True/false. You only should use propane and charcoal barbecue grills outdoors.

True/false. After grilling in a charcoal grill, you should be sure the coals are completely cool before disposing of them in a metal container.

As you might have guessed, all of those statements are true.

If you prefer to "burn" or blacken your protein foods, I encourage caution. According to the National Cancer Institute, compounds called "heterocyclic amines" (HCAs) can form in muscle foods (beef, poultry, pork, fish) during exposure to open flames or high temperatures during grilling. HCAs could increase your risk of colon, breast and stomach cancers.

However, you can take some steps to maintain the flavor, juiciness and safety of grilled foods

Cook foods to a safe temperature using a food thermometer to gauge doneness. The U.S. Department of Agriculture recommends an internal temperature of 165 F for poultry and 160 F for hamburgers. Yes, you can enjoy a rare steak if you prefer, but eating rare hamburgers is not recommended.

Try a marinade to add flavor and reduce the amount of HCAs that form. Allow about 1/4 cup of marinade per pound of meat. Marinades containing acidic ingredients such as salsa, vinegar or lemon juice seem to be particularly effective at reducing the formation of HCAs. When researchers marinated chicken breasts in a mixture containing lemon juice, vinegar and flavorings, they noted a reduction in HCA formation by more than 90%.

Marinate meat and poultry in a refrigerator, not on the counter. Turn the meat in the marinade occasionally for even flavoring.

For good quality, don't overdo the marinating process. For tender cuts, such as tenderloin, rib eye or sirloin, allow up to two hours for marinating. For less tender cuts, such as flank, skirt, chuck shoulder or top round, allow at least six hours (up to 24 hours) for marinating.

If you want to use some of the marinade for sauce after the meat is cooked, reserve some before you put the meat in it.

Avoid flare-ups when grilling by using lean meats and trimming excess fat from the meat.

Whether you like marinated or plain meat, cook at a lower heat setting or raise the grate on your grill. If you happen to char the edges of the meat, trim the burned parts prior to serving.

Add some grilled fruits and vegetables to your menu. Because fruits and vegetables are low in protein, HCAs do not form during the grilling process.

Bring a clean plate or serving tray to collect your delicious meal.

See https://www.ag.ndsu. edu/food/food-preparation/ grilling-1 for more grilling information from NDSU Extension.

Here's a simple marinade to try on chicken, beef, pork or poultry.

Zesty Italian Marinade

2/3 c. prepared Italian dressing 2 Tbsp. coarsely chopped fresh cilantro

1 Tbsp. chili powder

Combine all ingredients and mix well.

Depending on the brand of dressing, each tablespoon of marinade has about 50 calories, 5 g fat, 0 g protein, 1 g carbohydrate. 0 g fiber and 150 milligrams sodium.

Fire up the grill safely

BY JULIE GARDEN-ROBINSON FOOD AND NUTRITION SPECIALIST - NDSU

July is the peak month for grilling-related fires.

I have a healthy respect for grills.

We received a gas grill for our wedding and my husband kept rebuilding it periodically for almost 25 years.

I'm not sure if he was being nostalgic, romantic or frugal. I think the latter. At least I didn't say "cheap.'

I decided I should learn how to use the grill several years ago. Lighting it involved quite a protocol. I followed the protocol and tried to ignite the grill. That didn't work.

I "primed" it some more. The grill practically exploded upon ignition. I didn't know that I could jump backward that fast.

Fortunately, I still had eyebrows and hair after the incident. I didn't set the house on fire, either.

I turned all grilling duties over to my husband. Forever. I also bought him a new grill. Maybe that was his underlying motive. I do enjoy his outdoor cooking.

Lately, the aroma of grilled food has been wafting through my neighborhood and my own backvard.

Safety is paramount in several ways while grilling. from fire prevention at the grill to food safety in the kitchen.

According to the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA), 70% of adults have a grill or a smoker. Unfortunately, 8,900 home

HELPING WORDS

BY ANNIE LANGSETH GARRISON

For we who proclaim to follow in the way of Jesus. where does that way lead us? I suppose for many of us we $migh\bar{t}$ think first and foremost of heaven. That is, eternal life with God. But following in the way of Jesus has implications for our lives here and now. That Jesus slipped into skin and lived and moved among us, ministering to the needs of people is telling: life on earth matters to our God. And in this regard, the way of Jesus particularly has implications for our relationship with others. It's not just about Jesus and me. It's about Jesus and me and my neighbor.

So then, where does the way of Jesus lead us here on earth? Or rather, where does it call us?

The way of Jesus calls us out of ourselves and into relationship with the people and world God so loves. (Which, by the way, is all people and the whole world.) As such, it calls us out of our comfort zones, out of familiarity, and out of security. It calls us to those places in the world where sin, suffering, and death do all they can to separate us from one another and from God. Those places in the world scarred by abuse and violence, sickness and disease, oppression and prejudice. Where power is misused. Where lives are neglected or disregarded.

Where hatred festers.

In short, we are called to follow Jesus straight to the cross.

He who lost his life for our sake, calls us to lose our life for his sake; and truly, this is a call to die to ourselves and be raised again in lives that are lived for the sake of the neighbor. That the hungry would be fed, the thirsty would receive something to drink, the stranger would be welcomed, the imprisoned would be visited (Matthew 25:34-40). That the love of God in Christ Jesus would be shared lavishly with the least of these. That God's will would be done on earth as it is in heaven.

GARDENING TIPS Got a swamp plant it!

BY BEV JOHNSON M.G. University of Minnesota Extension

George, Bunkey's neighbor, has a swampy area in the back of his yard. It is too wet to mow so it always looked messy and George doesn't do messy. He decided that this year he was going to beautify that area one way or the other. He started in the library researching flowering plants that grew in wet or moist soil and were zone 3 or 4. He discovered that there were at least 6 native flowering plants that actually loved wet feet. There are grasses too but his take on planting grass is "I dig the darn stuff out of the flower beds, why would I plant more?'

(If it blooms, it is female.) It took most of last summer to be sure all the vegetation was really dead. This spring he was able to start on his swamp flower bed. Most of the plants that would do well were either white or pink Here is a list of the native perennials he planted. By the way, they all did very well.

Queen of the prairie, also called meadowsweet, (Fillipendula ruba) looks like a very tall astilbe. Very queen-like she is 3 to 6 feet tall depending on how well she likes her planning site. A native, she wants wet to moist soil and will reward you with a crown of pink, fluffy blooms in full sun. She will put up with light shade.

Another pink-purple bloomer is Swamp milkweed, (Acleppias incarnate). If you have the ordinary milkweed you may be a bit leery of this girl. She isn't invasive like her sister but it is a good idea to remove the seedpods before they open. Pollinators love the fragrant flowers and Monarchs are attracted to her too. She's a bit shorter, 3 to 5 feet tall and likes full sun and wet to moist soil.

The third native bloomer is Culver's root (Veronicastrum viginicum). Attractive, elegant and pretty much disease and pest free, this tall girl blooms with tall slender spikes of white on sturdy stems. The blooms have been compared to candelabra. Bees flock to her flowers. This is one plant that you could put in a rain garden as she will tolerate dry conditions but really prefers moist soil, full sun to part shade.

You may have killed a few of these plants before you realized they are happier in a bog or along a stream, and not in a regular flowerbed. Cardinal flower (Lobelia cardinalis) has gorgeous, showy red blooms that attract butterflies and hummingbirds. She blooms late summer, grows 2 to 4 feet tall in full sun or part shade.

For a long blooming perennial, if a bit of a wanderer, (she can be invasive) plant wild Bergamont (Monarda fistulosa). She has pretty lavender flowers that are pollinator friendly. She is powdery mildew resistant unlike some of her hybrid cousins. She doesn't want to stand in water but does want moist toes. She's a bit shorter than some of the others only 2 to 4 feet tall. Give her full sun to part shade.

Another white bloomer is white turtlehead (Chelone). She is a head turner in any garden. The snapdragon-like flowers appear in late summer and last into fall. She will do well in a rain garden as she will tolerate dry soil but prefers moist soil. She grows 2 to 4 feet tall depending on the variety. A cultivar named "Hot Lips has stunning deep pink flowers. Both want part sun or part shade.

All these plants are native perennials. Some can be invasive but if you can't grow anything else there, who cares. George got his wild Bergamont from a lady who warned him that it was "evasive". Could be.

DAKOTA GARDENER — — The importance of bees in vegetable gardens and backyard orchards

BY ESTHER MCGINNIS NDSU Extension Horticulturist

June 22-28 is National Pollinator Week.

Why do we celebrate bees and other pollinators? Ever hear the expression "busy as a bee"? One out of four bites of human food is courtesy of hard working bees.

While bees do not pollinate cereal crops such as wheat and barley, they are responsible for pollinating the majority of our vegetable, fruit and nut crops grown in the U.S. If bees disappeared from the Earth, we wouldn't starve.

However, our diets would be a whole lot less colorful and nutritious.

Why are bees so important for vegetable, fruit and nut production? Try not to blush: I am going to discuss plant reproduction.

Take cucumbers as an example. If you look closely in the garden, you will notice two types of flowers on the vines. The female flowers have a small ovary beneath the petals that resembles a tiny cucumber. In addition to the ovary, the female flower has a structure called a stigma to receive pollen grains from the male flower.

The male flower lacks an ovary and bears pollenproducing structures called anthers. If you have separate, immobile male and female flowers on the vine, how does pollination happen? That's where bees come into play. As they visit flowers on the cucumber vine, they accidentally pick up pollen grains from the male flower and bring them to the female flower. If bees are scarce in your area, you may have fewer cucumbers setting fruit.

Bees are absolutely essential for the production of apples. Unlike cucumbers, apples do not have separate male and female flowers.

However, to produce apples, you need bees carrying pollen between two separate apple trees that are different cultivars. For example, a 'Honeycrisp' apple blossom will not set fruit if a bee deposits pollen from a second 'Honeycrisp' apple tree. However, if pollen from a second cultivar such as 'Haralson' is deposited, a fruit may develop.

As you can see, bees are necessary to carry pollen between flowers and even between entire trees. Bees are an elegant solution to the problem of plants that cannot move.

To celebrate National Pollinator Week, consider incorporating native and ornamental flowering plants in your landscape to provide food for honey bees and native bees. Bees need flower nectar (a source of carbohydrates) and pollen to nourish their young and for a balanced diet. You can plant flowers and nourish your pollinators.

Blue Flint project funding OK'd

BY ALYSSA MEIER BHG NEWS

After a brief return to the Lignite Research Council, a carbon recapture project at Blue Flint Ethanol has been approved for funding.

The North Dakota Industrial Commission approved the project this month, after a little back and forth with the Lignite Research Council, which initially added a contingency to the $3.4 million allocation. After the commission asked the council to reconsider, the LRC removed the condition that demanded the full amount of funding needed to be returned if the project was unsuccessful.

In turn, the Industrial Commission passed the funding request.

The project, costing $7 million total, aims to study the possibility of CO2 capture at Blint Flint Ethanol, the neighbor of Coal Creek Station. The project will work to determine if it is possible to store CO2, which is used by the ethanol plant, underground.

Ingredients

- 1 tablespoon oil
- 1 pound lean ground beef
- 1/2 yellow onion (chopped)
- 1 teaspoon garlic powder
- 2 teaspoons Italian seasoning
- 3/4 teaspoon salt
- Black pepper (to taste)
- 2 tablespoons tomato paste
- 2 teaspoons Balsamic vinegar
- 4 cups low sodium beef broth
- 1 14.5- oz can diced tomatoes

Brown beef: Set instant pot to saute and add oil. Brown beef, then stir in the onion, garlic powder, thyme, salt, pepper, tomato paste and balsamic vinegar. Cook for 30 seconds, stirring constantly.

Deglaze: Pour the beef broth into the pot, scraping any bits off the bottom of the inner pot (not doing this correctly will trigger the burn warning!). Stir in the tomatoes and dry pasta.

Cook: Pressure cook for 3 minutes (for pasta that indicates more than 9 minutes of regular cooking time on the package, cook for 4 minutes), then quick release the pressure and open the pot. DAKOTA DATEBOOK Gladys Gibson

On this date in 1935, a 12man jury decided the fate of Gladys Gibson, a Dickinson woman on trial for murdering her husband a year and a half earlier.

The case would have in Dickinson, and the trial delighted today's tabloid writers. Nathaniel Gibson's job as a mail carrier brought home $200 a month; with this he supported his wife, Gladys, two teen daughters, Glady's brother, the brother's friend, and a housekeeper. Gladys said Nathaniel had become despondent in the months before his death, and he spent a lot of time reading religious literature that stated people who died prior to Jesus' second coming would automatically go to Heaven.

On the evening of December 4, 1933, Nathaniel went to a National Guard meeting. Gladys said she heard him outside at about 1 in the morning and found him drunk; she needed her brother's help to get him inside. They got Nathaniel out of his vomit-covered clothes, and Gladys said they went to bed. She got up whenever he threw up, and overcome by the odor, she went upstairs to the bathroom at about 4 a.m. Then, she looked in on her girls, and as she started down the stairs she heard a gunshot. Moments later, she found Nathaniel dying from a bullet to his left temple.

The doctor arrived shortly after and found the room quite neat. The other side of the bed hadn't been slept in, and Nathaniel's left arm was extended down his side, with his hand clutching a pistol. The doctor said he smelled liquor on Nathaniel's breath but no smell of vomit.

The coroner's inquest called it suicide. But, State's Attorney Theodore Kellogg and his assistant, H.A. Mackoff, weren't convinced. They hired a detective, Jim Harris, who rented a room from Gladys. Harris posed as a Chicago gangster and slowly befriended Gladys.

Months later, Gladys and the detective went on a date, ending up in a cabin near Jamestown. The cabin was outfitted with a hidden dictaphone and a stenographer who took down their conversation. It was here that Gladys admitted she killed Nathaniel, saying he had gotten out of bed and told her he wanted to have sex with his daughter and favor of her mother's alibi. the housekeeper; so she killed

Also damaging was the testimony of the housekeeper, whose 26-year-old brother, Joe, turned out to be Glady's lover. Nathaniel had thrown Joe out and told him to never come back, but the housekeeper said Gladys would signal Nathaniel with a light in the window when the coast was clear for him to visit. It didn't help that Joe moved in with Gladys just a few days after Nathaniel died.

The last bit of incriminating evidence was Nathaniel's $8,000 life insurance policy. Kellogg finished his closing arguments by saying, "She killed him because she story she later changed in wanted his money and didn't want to live with him."

> After deliberating for nearly 45 hours, the jury agreed. Gladys was found guilty of second-degree murder and sentenced to 15 vears in prison. She made several appeals, but they all failed.
