HEALTHY HAPPENINGS

Diabetes Prevention Program – Virtual Classes
 This 26 session program offers a Lifestyle Coach who will guide you on weight loss, increasing your physical activity and making small lifestyle changes that are proven to reduce the development of diabetes. Classes begin virtually on August 18th, 6:00 p.m. Call Janet Wanek, Registered Dietician for more information or to register, 873-4445. Covered by Medicare and most insurances.

National Health Center Week – August 9-15
 National Health Center Week is a time to recognize health centers across the Dakotas that are lighting the way for healthier communities, today and in the future. Join us as we recognize the significant impact CHCs have on patients and communities. Find one of our convenient locations near you!

COVID-19 Prevention Tip
 Always cover your mouth and nose with a tissue when you cough or sneeze, or use the inside of your elbow and do not spit. Respiratory droplets produced when an infected person coughs or sneezes can land in the mouths or noses of people who are nearby or possibly be inhaled into the lungs.

Well Child Checks
 Are you on track? Coal Country Community Health Center is offering backpacks filled with fun! Children ages 3-6 years old must complete their Well Child Check in the month of August or September to receive a backpack. A great time to update immunizations. Call to schedule an appointment for your child at any CCCHC Clinic!

National Breastfeeding Month
 Breastfeeding is a vital component of sustainable development and a critical component to end malnutrition. Custer Health provides a number of resources that can help give you the confidence and support that many new moms need to breastfeed. Contact Heidi Moore, Certified Lactation Counselor, at 873-4433 for more information.

A large buck pronghorn surveys a field south of Mandan, N.D. That unit (11-A) will be opened with Unit 13-A and 8-A for hunting in 2020. Simonson Photo.

Unit reopening evidence of pronghorn rebound

By Nick Simonson

The North Dakota Game and Fish Department (NDG&F) announced last week that 1,790 tags would be available for the pronghorn hunting lottery in 2020. While this number was up significantly from the 1,330 licenses made available in 2019, it's the expansion of the units open to hunters that better evidences the improving size of the pronghorn herds found in the state's western half. Most notable was the reopening of Unit 13-A, located in northwestern North Dakota, bounded by the Canadian and Montana borders, Highways 52 and 8 on the eastern end and the Missouri River on the south. This large unit had been closed to pronghorn hunting since 1993.

"There are various locations north and east of the Missouri River all the way down to the South Dakota line for that matter where there are some isolated pockets of pronghorn; this particular area in the Northwest is an area we've been keeping our eye on for the last couple of years just because the numbers have been improving," said Jeb Williams, NDG&F Wildlife Division Chief, "we felt it was time with the numbers we've been seeing on the landscape," he added in regard to the opening of the unit which has been closed for 27 seasons.

The area has struggled to regain pronghorn numbers since the 1990s, due to weather and other factors including habitat fragmentation, with the winter of 1996-97 playing a major role in knocking back populations. Tough winters since that time have also hindered recruitment of pronghorn in the region falling under Unit 13-A, which Williams related is not primary territory for the unique big game animals. With recent mild winters however, and close observation by NDG&F agents and reports from the public, the agency okayed the opportunity to open the area up to hunting, based on certain benchmarks.

"Different management units in the state have some

Anglers come from far and wide, like Adam Sersha of Eveleth, MN, with a nice chinook caught last summer along the face of Garrison Dam. Simonson Photo.

Starting on salmon

By Nick Simonson

August brings with it high anticipation for the hunting seasons that follow. Oftentimes, the month is hall-marked by dog training, target shooting and physical preparation for what's to come in the autumn. But in the heat of summer's sweet spot, many sportsmen of a different stripe know that action is picking up for a unique fishing opportunity in North Dakota along the face of Garrison Dam and the southern stretches of Lake Sakakawea. The search for chinook salmon fills the gap between the end of July and whatever opening day – deer, upland or ducks – is circled on the calendar in the month ahead.

There, in a leisurely L shape running from Government Bay, one can find hundreds of boats on a given day, rods bent in tight arcs with tips bowed to the lead downrigger balls in the water beneath the stern. While it may take a bit of up-front investment to join them, avid angler Jason Renner, administrator of the North Dakota Salmon Reports Facebook page, suggests it doesn't have to cost an arm and a leg to chase after the silver fish in the depths below.

"Whatever you can afford is what you need to do, just get into the sport," Renner recommends on getting a boat set up, "get some downriggers, some downrigger rods and run with at least 20 pound line," he continues, adding that line counter reels help keep track of how far out a lure is, and are helpful to know when a fish is making a run and how close it is to the boat at the end of the fight.

Options for downriggers include hand-crank and electric models, with the latter able to quickly pull the downrigger balls, which range from eight to 12 pounds in weight, up to the surface and out of the way when a fish is hooked. Renner suggests watching both retail and online stores for end-of-season discounts and keeping tabs on community marketplaces for reduced-price salmon gear, which tends to come up for sale in a large lot including the hardware and the tackle to jump start entry into the exciting niche.

A pair of rods sit ready for a strike, with tips pointing down to the lead balls which get baits deep into the water where salmon search for smelt in late summer on Lake Sakakawea. Simonson Photo.

On the business end, trolled behind the ball are large flashers, colored plastic boards adorned with shimmering stickers and paint jobs designed to imitate feeding action in the deep water below and draw the attention of salmon. Behind those attractors, anglers will deploy plastic squid over tinsel flash as artificial lures, or herring hoods for the trolling of the six-to-eight-inch oily bait that mimic the smelt found deep in the lake. Super-sharp octopus hooks from 1/0 to 3/0 are the norm, and anglers should run each over a sharpener to make sure they connect with the bony mouth of a chinook on a strike. Knowing where salmon are feeding through the use of electronics, helps anglers determine the depth that is working, and where they should be focusing during a trip to maximize those connections.

"There's two things I look for mainly, the presence of baitfish and the presence of a thermocline...salmon seem to relate quite a bit to that," Renner states of the dividing line between the lake's warmer upper reaches and the colder water below that often serves as the holding point for salmon and their preferred forage, "they're a cold-water species, the smelt are [too]...if you do see bait down there, and they're towered up with some arcs in there, stick around there, because if you're not getting bit, you will be shortly," Renner adds.

With high water in recent years, surveys and egg collection processes by the North Dakota Game & Fish Department (NDG&F) have found many larger salmon flushed into the tailrace below Garrison Dam, but with things settling down, Renner expects more quality salmon to be found up in the lake in the late summer and early fall of 2020 than in the last two years. Through the collegial community which he helps connect through his online work, he is hearing good things and is optimistic for the next six weeks of trolling on the big water.

"So far the fish coming though have been really good sized...I've heard of a lot of 8, 9, 10 and up to 13 pound fish being caught this year," Renner reports, "numbers are still a question, the past couple years have been a little iffy with the gates being open, a lot of those slipped through the dam and down into the tailrace," he continues.

To sustain the fishery, each year the NDG&F collects more than a million eggs from salmon that attempt a spawning run, with 1.6 million collected in 2019 from their efforts. This allows the agency to stock the water with approximately 400,000 smolts (juvenile salmon) annually, which was the plan for 2020. These efforts provide a unique opportunity for anglers, and fill up a deep fishing option that keeps anglers like Renner coming back and sharing his passion online and on the water, and helping others get started in the process of utilizing the unique fishery. To connect with Renner and the North Dakota salmon fishing community, visit the ND Salmon Reports Facebook Page.

Pronghorn herds have rebounded throughout the western portion of ND and in unit 13-A in the northwestern corner, a region which has been closed to pronghorn hunting since 1993. Simonson Photo.

different measurements [and] different goals as far as that data collection goes," Williams related, "13-A is a little bit different just because we made the decision to go with a bigger unit, size wise, looking for some good opportunity to get people back on the landscape chasing pronghorn," referencing the size of the space and the added chances to hunt.

With the opening of 13-A, along with units 8-A north of Dickinson and 11-A west of Mandan, the latter two having been closed since 2009, hunters may see some opportunities to harvest impressive, unpressured buck pronghorn which likely have not seen pursuit in their lifetimes. With the years spent under no hunting seasons, it is likely that many bucks in those newly-opened areas will have large horns and be sought after by those sportsmen lucky enough to draw one of the 240 tags combined over the three reopened units. It's a prospect that will have many hunters considering their options, as 11,721 people applied for the 881 lottery tags which remained after the 449 gratis tags were deducted from last year's total number.

"When there are some units that have not been opened up for a while there's the potential of an opportunity to have certainly a handful or more of pronghorn bucks that have gotten some age on them," Williams commented, "at that five to six years of growth, you're talking about a pretty mature pronghorn in North Dakota and so there's no doubt there's some opportunities there," he added, cautioning that hunters should be realistic in their expectations, and that not all bucks they see or have an opportunity to tag will be monsters.

Tags awarded in the 2020 pronghorn lottery are good for both an archery season running from Sept. 4 through Sept. 27 and a firearms season which is open from Oct. 2 until Oct. 18. The application deadline for the resident-only online lottery is Aug. 5 and the turn-around time for the awarding of tags is approximately one to two weeks, allowing sportsmen the back half of the month and a few days in September before the archery season for scouting and making contact with landowners to set up their adventures. More information on the 2020 North Dakota pronghorn hunting season can be found at gf.nd.gov/hunting/pronghorn.
