Consider Composting

PRAIRIE FARE

BY JULIE GARDEN-ROBINSON
FOOD AND NUTRITION
SPECIALIST - NDSU

"You're moving the compost pile?" I asked.

I had a note of disbelief in my voice.

"Well, yeah," my husband replied matter-of-factly.

End of conversation.

About 15 years ago, we moved from our first house to our current one, along with our compost pile and three young kids.

My husband found a nice, shady spot cleverly hidden under some evergreen trees.

I think the real estate agent was happy we moved the compost pile prior to trying to sell our original house.

Composting has been my husband's pet project. He moved from Oregon, where recycling and composting were regular habits, to North Dakota many years ago.

After 27 years of marriage, I have adapted to having a lot of bins for recycling and composting.

My husband has adapted to my love of growing flowers, vegetables and fruit trees.

Actually, our hobbies are mutually beneficial. My garden scraps feed the compost pile. The compost helps my gardens grow really well.

Composting also is good for the environment. According to a University of Washington study, food waste generates methane when it goes to landfills but not when it is composted. When you compost at home, you are doing a favor for the environment.

Some people call compost "black gold" because this rich mixture of decomposed plant material provides nitrogen, copper, zinc, phosphorus and other nutrients.

If you never have composted, you might want to consider it. About 95% of food scraps end up in the landfill. Composting is a way to reduce food waste while transforming plant materials into rich, fertile humus through the action of microorganisms.

Find a shady spot because your compost pile should remain moist and not dry out. Many experts suggest starting with a bin that is 3 by 3 by 3 feet or a 5-foot cube. You can buy a bin or make your own. You will need a shovel or pitch fork to turn your pile.

Think of compost as a mixture of greens, browns and water. In general, a 50:50 mixture of greens and browns is the recommended "recipe."

"Greens" include items such as apple cores, leafy greens, onion skins, corn cobs and husks, egg shells, banana peels, potato peels, weeds and coffee grounds. Most of these items are particularly high in nitrogen.

"Browns" provide carbon and include small branches, leaves, shredded paper, nut shells, coffee filters, straw, wood chips and empty cardboard tubes.

Smaller pieces will break down more quickly.

Water also is essential for the microorganisms to act. The pile should be damp, like a wrung-out sponge.

Avoid putting certain items in your compost bin. Fats, grease, oils, meat and bones may attract unwanted animals to your bin and cause odor. If you have pets, do not put their waste in the bin. Avoid adding yard trimmings treated with pesticides, diseased plants or weeds with mature seed heads.

Composting does require some tending. Experts suggest turning it monthly or more often. On average, with the right conditions, you will have compost ready in about three months.

You can keep feeding your compost bin in all seasons. Although turning the compost may become impossible in the winter, the breakdown of the plant material will continue slowly.

We have added our compost to raised gardens or put it around trees and shrubs to hold moisture.

Our compost is placed in garbage cans on wheels so we can move it easily around our yard. Try placing about 3 inches of compost on top of soil and working it 8 to 12 inches into the soil.

Did I mention I like flowers? I have many containers around our yard that show their appreciation for the natural fertilizer by blooming brightly. Most gardening experts recommend about one part compost to three parts soil for potted plants.

As food preservation season continues and fall yardwork begins, I will share plenty of scraps and yard waste with the compost bin.

This recipe provides a delicious side dish for dinner and peelings for a compost bin. Add a meatloaf or other protein to these roasted root vegetables and you have an oven dinner perfect for a fall evening.

Roasted Root Vegetables
4 medium-sized vegetables (potatoes, sweet potatoes, turnips, beets)

2 carrots, pared and chopped
1 medium onion, chopped
3 Tbsp. cooking oil (such as olive, canola, sunflower)

Spices of choice (Italian seasoning, rosemary, pepper, etc.)

Preheat oven to 350 F. Rinse, peel and cut vegetables into chunks. Place in a bowl and add oil. Add seasoning and mix well. Spread in a single layer on a baking sheet with sides. Bake about one hour, until vegetables are tender.

Makes four servings. With two potatoes, a sweet potato and a beet, and Italian seasoning, each serving has 190 calories, 10 grams (g) fat, 3 g protein, 26 g carbohydrate, 4 g fiber and 30 milligrams sodium (without added salt).

OUR OUTDOORS

The Take Over, The Break's Over

BY NICK SIMONSON
DAKOTA EDGE OUTDOORS

Covid-19 changed the complexion of my summer and that of many other folks, but what it failed to affect, save for the occasional cancellation of a fishing derby or walleye tournament I may have participated in or covered, was the summer angling efforts across the map. In fact, many state agencies around the country are reporting a solid spike in angling license sales in 2020 due to the current situation. Outside of those few social aspects that a weekend fishing event brings to the pastime, most angling is done alone or with a close friend or family members and remains relatively untouched by the pandemic, and the solitude found in a stream or on a lake fosters further use of the resource. The same can be said for hunting, and despite the ongoing medical emergency spanning the country and the globe, with some opening dates already passed on the calendar and those to come over the next several weeks.

While hunting as a large group is tradition, particularly on those big openers like pheasant season and deer firearms, so many opportunities cater to the solo hunter, the father-son pair or a trio of buddies in the field. It's likely in this time of social distancing that hunting will continue to help fill the void for safe recreational opportunities, and with so many chances to chase waterfowl, upland game and big game on the horizon or already upon us, whatever break one might have had - if any - is over and the takeover of those open days by these autumn outdoor opportunities is about to begin.

It's a noted saying in the upper Midwest that "hunting and fishing often gets in the way of my hunting and fishing." In the fall, that statement couldn't be more true, especially on the hunting side of the coin. As an avid uplander and bow hunter, it's often tough to choose between time on stand or starting a morning in the field behind my dog. I find it hard to believe I could make a decision if I added waterfowl to the mix, but for those who are more versatile than I, my guess is it is a welcome challenge penciling in their autumn weekends and scheduling out their hunts. No rest for the willing who rise before dawn and come in from a road traveled in the dark after tapping the last minute of legal light waiting for their quarry.

The effort and enjoyment goes far beyond the time in a tree or breaking a sweat along the edge of a brushline of buffaloberries and caragana. Whether it's washing a load of camo in scent-free soap, or strapping a canine carrier into the back of a truck, while leaving room for a bow case and a set of tree steps, preparation is half the fun of getting set for an amazing stretch of hunting. Whatever it takes to prepare for success is easily accomplished this time of year as a new autumn sets out before us and takes over much of the free time allotted. That's a price of admission that's easy to pay, particularly with college and pro football operating on a limited scale, if at all for some schools, leaving more time for the field and less time in front of the screen screaming at yet another missed field goal.

So if you've been on snooze for the last few weeks, working your way through the dog days of summer, or have just taken some time off to enjoy a final stretch of fishing over the Labor Day weekend, fall is here in one form or another, and the excitement of hunting is about to take over your life. Wake up, shake off the rust and get ready for your quarry to break loose in the field, regardless of if it crows, honks, grunts, ruts, flies or bounds away.
