Golden Industry DAKOTA DATEBOOK

BY TESSA SANDSTROM

October 20, 2020 — Engineers were sifting flour, but it wasn't the usual flour that is produced from North Dakota's golden wheat fields. Instead, engineers were sifting for flour gold in the fields between Towner and Balfour, and the process was proclaimed successful today in 1934. The area where the gold was being mined had been part of a glacial lake that stretched from Devil's Lake to Scobey, Montana, and up into Canada. Gold was found in the three separate strata of the bed. Attempts had been made to mine this gold for several years, but there hadn't been a process of mining it at low enough cost to return a profit. An experimental plant had been in operation between Towner and Balfour to try and separate the powdery gold from the sand and gravel. The sand was put through a vibrator and screen and placed in settling tanks. The finer particles were treated with both mercury (amalgamation) and cyanide (cyanidation) to expose the precious metal. "The result was gold," reported the Minot Daily News, "but gold sufficient to satisfy observers that the system is proven." The tests yielded anywhere from 10 cents to 40 dollars per ton, "conservatively." "There are literally thousands of acres of gold bearing sands in the glacial drift," reported the Minot Daily, "with literally billions of dollars in new wealth available." The Rich History of Jack-o'-lanterns and Pumpkins

DAKOTA GARDENER

BY ESTHER MCGINNIS
 HORTICULTURIST

Each year, families make the pilgrimage to the pumpkin patch to purchase the perfect specimen for carving jack-o'-lanterns.

How did this Halloween tradition originate? A long and interesting history on both sides of the Atlantic Ocean underlies this tradition.

According to Irish folklore, "Stingy Jack" was a drunk and a scoundrel. Intrigued with his devious disposition, the devil sought to claim his soul. During two separate encounters, Jack managed to escape the devil's clutches through trickery.

In the first encounter, he convinced the devil to transform into a silver coin. He then placed the coin next to a silver cross, thereby confining the devil. In another encounter, he conned the devil into climbing a tree and then trapped him by drawing crosses in the tree bark.

After he died, both heaven and hell refused to admit Stingy Jack. Doomed to wander the dark netherworld, the devil threw Jack a burning ember to light the way. Jack then placed the ember in a carved turnip. The lighted turnip became known as a jack-o'-lantern and was used by the Irish and Scottish to frighten wandering spirits during All Hallows' Eve.

When the Irish and Scottish immigrated to the U.S., they brought their jack-o'-lantern tradition. However, the tradition took on an American flavor and transitioned into the carving of large pumpkins that were in abundant supply.

Pumpkins have an amazing history that even predates the Irish legend of Stingy Jack. They are believed to have originated in Central America but eventually were introduced into Mexico and the southern U.S.

Scientists found the remnants of ancient pumpkins in a cave in Oaxaca, Mexico. Archaeological evidence shows that pumpkins were cultivated approximately 7,500 to 9,000 years ago or even earlier. Therefore, this is one of the first cultivated food crops in the Western Hemisphere.

American Indians grew and consumed pumpkins as an integral part of their diet, with each tribe having unique ways of preparing and drying the flesh.

If you are interested in buying a pumpkin for your front porch, here are some tips for selecting a good one that will last and not decay quickly:

Choose a pumpkin that has a hard rind; your fingernail will dent it but not puncture the rind.

Look for a hardened stem that is at least 4 inches long; the length of the stem helps with the curing and hardening process.

Do not carry the pumpkin by the stem.

Unfortunately, large pumpkins that are sold for carving have stringy flesh that is not suitable for pie. Interestingly, most canned pumpkin in the grocery store is actually Dickinson squash.

Before you worry about a mislabeling controversy, you need to know that pumpkins and squash are genetically very similar. If you are interested in growing heirloom Dickinson squash, seeds are available from online specialty seed retailers.

For more information about gardening, contact your local NDSU Extension agent. Find the Extension office for your county at <https://www.ag.ndsu.edu/extension/directory/counties>.

OUR OUTDOORS

Upward Trends

BY NICK SIMONSON
DAKOTA EDGE OUTDOORS

Autumn is always a time of optimism for many hunters as opportunities for excitement abound over the top of each rise and in the shady depths of every creek bottom. Putting the approach of winter aside, fall provides so much in the way of hopefulness in the pursuit of game that it is often hard to prioritize outings, and the shortening days go faster and faster as the season winds down. This year, however, there is even more to be excited about, as numbers across the board for those three things vital to the continued tradition of hunting, sportsmen and their quarries are trending in an upward direction.

Habitat

With the passage of the most recent Farm Bill and the increase in acres allowed under the legislation's cap for acres in the Conservation Reserve Program (CRP), 2020 saw the influx of applications for the retirement of marginal lands into set-aside programs.

While helping operators better manage their acres and avoid wasted inputs like seed and spray, the uptick in lands allowed under the cap will help increase habitat on the landscape, with the phased-in enrollment of up to 27 million acres in the program by 2023.

Coupled with growing private lands initiatives and precision agricultural programs by non-government entities like Pheasants Forever and Ducks Unlimited that help producers maximize their farmable acres and find state and federal programs for their marginal, riparian and non-grazeable lands, habitat which sustains wildlife throughout the state and the country is once again increasing. This trend helps to provide more carrying capacity for huntable game and non-game species alike, and to buffer against the always-possible inclement winter weather which can be a major negative influence on their numbers.

Access

At the height of its popularity, and the abundance of marginal acres on the landscape, North Dakota's Private Land Open to Sportsmen (PLOTS) program had more than 1.1 million acres available to public access in the mid-2000s. Paralleling the rise in CRP enrollments, the access program helped provide more opportunities to hunters throughout the state to get at the habitat that held the game animals they pursued. As CRP trended downward in 2010, so did the access that those enrolled in both the federal program and the state access plan.

Now, however, PLOTS has seen an increase not only in total acres, but also in the quality of land which is opened to hunters. Rarer now is the barren wheat field surrounded by yellow triangles, as agents of the North Dakota Game & Fish Department (NDG&F) strive to ensure a huntable habitat component in their contracts with landowners who grant access. With more than 800,000 acres part of PLOTS this autumn, hunters will find more opportunities and those of better quality on which to venture after pheasants, ducks, deer and other game.

Wildlife

No matter how much grass is in the ground, or how well protected a winter herding area might be, wildlife populations are subject to the whims of mother nature. Whether it's a cold and snowy winter that impacts survival or a wet and chilly spring that hinders recruitment, there are elements that are beyond the control of man that impact wildlife populations.

Thankfully, for much of the state and the region, the winter was generally mild, or at least survivable, and the spring and summer were temperate without too much rain or cold temperatures to inhibit the recruitment of young.

The NDG&F reported upticks across the board for many game species in the state, including a 38 percent increase in pheasant numbers statewide. Larger game like mule deer and pronghorn benefitted from an almost non-existent winter in the west, as their surveyed numbers increased seven and six percent respectively. Whitetail numbers were up as well, resulting in the addition of thousands more licenses for this year's firearms season, to a recent-high total of more than 69,000 firearms tags. Add in a better breeding season for ducks and more grouse seen on the landscape, and the upward trend for wildlife is becoming clear thanks to a little help from the weather and the increased habitat on the landscape.

The three-legged stool on which the North American model of conservation and the century of hunting heritage sits has stabilized, at least for the time being. With the continuing increase in habitat through federal reserve acres, more and better access for hunters, and some favorable conditions to help with populations of wildlife, the trend is clear.

While it may not be "the good ol' days" that some remember in the first decade of this century, or those farther back in the previous one, the coming together of these elements is a step in the right direction for the future of hunting, be it in the weeks ahead or as a template for the years to come.

Hi, I am Marshall, My Grandpa, Terry Jones is seeking reelection as your State Representative. Look for his ad with the District 4 Republicans.
