Try the food storage quiz

PRAIRIE FARE

BY JULIE GARDEN-ROBINSON
FOOD AND NUTRITION SPECIALIST
NDSU EXTENSION

"I had the leftover stuffing for lunch," my daughter texted.

It was cleverly hidden behind the milk and at the outer limit of its shelf life. Cleaning the refrigerator was on my list.

Therefore, I couldn't tell her not to eat the "old stuffing." Fortunately, she was OK.

My family has a love-hate relationship with leftovers. One daughter loves them, and the other one prefers freshly made food. Sometimes, however, she has no choice but to eat reheated leftovers.

Our son used to avoid leftovers until he began living on his own. Now he explores the refrigerator for food. Buying your own food definitely affects your willingness to waste it.

My husband and I eat leftovers almost every day. I make extra food so we have lunch for the next day to save time, effort and money.

Unfortunately, too much food is wasted annually.

According to the Economic Research Service, between 30% and 40% of food is wasted yearly. That amounts to 80 billion pounds of food worth $161 billion. That's about 219 pounds of food waste for every person.

Along with buying what we can use within a reasonable time, we need to keep safety in mind, too.

How long is fresh food and leftover food "safe" in your refrigerator or freezer? Try this quiz. You can download a free "food keeper" app on your smartphone or visit <https://www.foodsafety.gov/keep-food-safe/foodkeeper-app> and use the information online.

1. Maintaining food at the proper temperature is key to food safety. At what temperature should you maintain your refrigerator, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA)?

a) 35 F

b) 40 F

c) 45 F

2. At what temperature should your freezer be maintained, according to the USDA?

a) minus 5 F

b) 0 F

c) 5 F

3. You bought a turkey to enjoy for the holidays and froze it. For the best quality, within how many months should you use your frozen turkey?

a) 6 months

b) 9 months

c) 12 months

4. You have a frozen turkey in your freezer maintained at the proper temperature. It has been stored frozen for two years. Is it safe to eat?

a) Yes

b) No

5. To save time, you purchased refrigerator cookie dough for the holidays. How long is the dough of high quality and freshness?

a) 4 days from purchase date

b) 7 days from purchase date

c) Consult the use-by date on the package

6. You made a casserole and refrigerated the leftovers. How long is the casserole safe and high quality?

a) 2 days

b) 4 days

c) 7 days

7. You found a can of cranberry sauce that you purchased 18 months ago. Is it safe to use?

a) Yes

b) No

The answers are 1. b;

2. b; 3. c; 4. a; 5. c; 6. b; 7. a.

Most leftover food is good for three to four days after preparation as long as the food was prepared safely and refrigerated promptly. If you will not use leftovers within this time period, consider freezing the food. Frozen food is "safe" for long periods of time, but the quality will decline with time.

Visit <https://www.ag.ndsu.edu/food/food-safety/> home to learn more about home food safety and visit <https://www.ag.ndsu.edu/food/food-preservation/freezing> to learn about freezing food for best quality.

Here's a tasty way to creating something "new" from leftovers.

7 Steps to Making a Quesadilla

Heat a nonstick frying pan to medium-high heat. Add 1/2 teaspoon of olive or canola oil and spread around frying pan. When the oil is hot, place one whole-wheat tortilla in the pan.

Sprinkle 1/4 cup of your favorite low-fat shredded cheese, such as mozzarella, Monterey jack or cheddar, over the top of the tortilla, making sure that the cheese does not land on the pan.

Add 1/2 cup of protein, such as canned beans (drained and rinsed), cooked chicken, turkey, shrimp, shredded pork or beef, or tofu.

Add 1/2 cup of veggies for flavor, fiber and extra nutrition. Try tomatoes, spinach, mushrooms, bell peppers, corn, onions, avocados or your favorite veggie of choice. Add cilantro, pineapple, hot sauce, jalapenos, black olives or salsa for an additional boost of flavor.

Sprinkle 2 tablespoons of cheese on top of the fillings and place the other whole-wheat tortilla on top. Cover pan and cook for approximately two to four minutes or until cheese begins to melt and tortilla browns.

Using a spatula, carefully flip the quesadilla over and cook for approximately two more minutes.

Cut into six pieces and top with guacamole, salsa and low-fat sour cream or plain or Greek yogurt.

The nutritional value varies depending on the ingredients you choose.

The Warmth of a Good Fire and Good Friendship

DAKOTA GARDENER:

BY JOE ZELEZNIK
FORESTER
NDSU EXTENSION

As we all know, 2020 has been an interesting year.

My wife and I have been very fortunate; we're healthy and we've been able to visit with a few of our neighbors about once a month. These get-togethers have all been outdoors and usually there's a small bonfire involved.

One of our friends already is worried about winter, though. Will we be able to see each other at all? My response is, "Absolutely! We just need warmer clothes and bigger bonfires."

Relatively few households use wood as their main source of heat, although the percentage has increased in the last 20 years as outdoor wood furnaces have become more common. Indoor wood stoves also are relatively uncommon, although not unheard of.

When I was in graduate school in West Virginia, we actually had a wood-burning stove as a secondary source of heat for our small rental house. Otherwise, we used electric baseboard heating. That wood stove saved us a lot of money when funds were tight.

A very unique wood-heated facility in North Dakota is at Bismarck State College. The BSC Aquatic Center burns wood waste from the Bismarck Forestry Department's pruning program. It's a great use of a resource that otherwise might go to waste. Many municipal forestry programs offer wood to residents, although you'll probably have to do the cutting and splitting yourself.

How much heat does wood give out? I've looked into this question a lot through the years and I'm always surprised by the answers. Pound for pound, most hardwood (deciduous) tree species contain roughly the same amount of heat - about 8,600 British thermal units (BTUs) per pound (<https://extension.missouri.edu/media/wysiwyg/Extensiondata/Pub/pdf/agguides/forestry/g05450.pdf>). Bur oak, boxelder and even cottonwood all hold a similar amount of heat by the pound.

But firewood is rarely sold by the pound. Instead, it's usually sold by volume - by the cord. What's a cord? It's a stacked pile of wood, bark and air space that measures 4 feet high by 8 feet wide by 4 feet deep. A "face cord" is a stacked pile that's 4 feet high by 8 feet wide by X feet deep. X is usually 16, 20 or 24 inches, based on what size a given stove or fireplace can take.

For my own firewood, I'll take the oak instead of cottonwood any day. Oak is much denser than cottonwood and we have limited storage space. Although boxelder is pretty abundant, oak is a lot easier to split.

I like to let my firewood dry for at least a year before using it. Cottonwood contains an amazing amount of water, and once the wood dries, it's very light and puts off very little heat.

There's an old saying about firewood that goes like this: Firewood heats you three times. The first is when you cut it. The second time is when you split and stack it. The third time is when you finally burn it.

My wife and I likely will have a few fires in the fireplace this winter. It's very comforting on a cold, windy night. And maybe on those occasional calm days, we'll go outside and have a bonfire with our friends. That'll keep us warm.

For more information about gardening, contact your local NDSU Extension agent. Find the Extension office for your county at <https://www.ag.ndsu.edu/extension/directory/counties>.

OUR OUTDOORS

The Weight of the Wait

BY NICK SIMONSON

DAKOTA EDGE OUTDOORS
With the anchor-like weight of a deer tag becoming more and more tangible in the right leg pocket of my camouflage hunting pants and that heft spurring much of my recent outdoor activity, I catch myself thinking ahead. Beyond the quiet morning sits and windy sneaks through the countryside as I wait for a buck – at this time, I'd take any buck – to magically appear in front of me.

As I do, I listen to the winged world around me, as chickadees, nuthatches, woodpeckers and other birds of the creek and river bottoms herald the opening hour. And then, once I've followed the sun through the sky from my vantage point on the grassy hillside, they again warn me of the approaching end of each day afield, pointing out that I have yet to set my crosshairs on my target. In my slow hikes, the ones where I hope to gently nudge my quarry from his daytime hiding spot in the tangled ground cover, other birds greet me, most notably the coveys of sharptailed grouse, which abound this particular season, along with a good population of pheasants.

Their whirring wings spark a muscle memory from September and October and despite the dozens of encounters in this halftime of sorts in their hunting seasons, it takes a second for my synapses to override the mechanical motion of my shoulders and biceps raising the unfamiliar firearm in an instinctive snap.

Across the brown landscape, I watch the hens and roosters fly, pumping their wings and gliding softly over the rises. Their tailfeathers are growing long as the birds enter the back half of November, and the tips of their plumage wave out a goodbye as they disappear over the horizon. Marking each spot in my mind, if not on my GPS, I make note of the public land encounters so that I may return in the late season with my dog, when these birds likely will not flush so close. When in search of deer, it seems, all other species are near.

So it goes when you're focused on one pursuit and entering the final stretch of a season, with the self-inflicted pressure of a paper tag weighing in on every outdoor decision. The guilt of even considering an outing with my dog for those birds during this stretch is enough to override that brought on by his excited brown eyes when I wake up early and sneak out to the truck in the pre-dawn light, dressed in the kind of hunting gear he has now come to recognize does not include him.

Still, it doesn't stop him from approaching the door, tail wagging excitedly as if its motion could change my mind as I sprint out into the garage, holding my breath and only exhaling as the mechanical door goes up and the engine turns over to drown out the pleading whine I'm certain I can still hear coming from up the wooden steps and behind the walk-out door.

The anthropomorphizing is ridiculous, but it doesn't stop there this time of year.

Just as it appears that all antlered animals learn to read posted signs on opening day or waterfowl can hone in on refuge sites in their migrations or pheasants know the safest spot in the world is next to the front porch stoop of any farm house, the end of the firearms season will bring with it a flip in the encounter ratio, and the buck I seek will come bounding from cover the day after, and probably bring three of his friends with him, laughing all the way.

In the process, they'll sprint off and probably send 150 pheasants flushing from the grass, cattails and brush at the end of his jaunt to add insult to the calendar-induced injury. In the meantime though, I'll continue the hunt and attempt to shed a few pounds by affixing the cast iron gym plate folded up in my wallet to some antler bone in these final days, hopeful for the recklessness of the rut to bring a deer my way... in our outdoors.
