Three boys HAT TIPS

BY DEAN MEYER

Hello, We dodged a big old snow storm this past week! I was kind of ready for it. Other than the hoses spread out across the yard. The bales still in the field. The calves still on a few cows. Water lines not winterized. Tanks to repair. All in all, I'm closer than normal. The storm went south and east of us, but some of you may have been hit. Hope you got by alright!

Shirley and I had grandkids for a few days this past week. Three boys. From three to 10 years old. Out house is too small. I never noticed before. When we bought this house Shirley wanted to put a basement under it. I put my foot down and said no. Basements are cold and damp and full of stuff that you don't use. So we have no basement and all the stuff we don't use is stacked upstairs or in the garage. And I don't mind that (I hope Shirley does not read this).

I go to bed early. Especially with the time change. Late night TV is that show where you guess the phrase. You know. "I'd like to buy a vowel." It's on so late I can't remember the name of it.

So when we have three boys that get wound up about six o'clock and start tearing through the house, it upsets the equilibrium that I have encased myself with.

But I do enjoy having them help with chores. "Help" being the key word here.

Evan can do chores when it is 25 above and windy out wearing only basketball trunks and tennis shoes. He's warm blooded. And it keeps me warm hollering at him to go put some clothes on. But he doesn't.

RJ rides the pail calves and practices steer wrestling as the calves try to come up to the bunk to eat. I think he has a real future. He even started jumping off his horse onto the ground to practice! Actually he was riding backwards and his horse took off for home. He couldn't get turned around so he bailed off. He thought it was fun!

Slate is the three year old. Like me, he is an early riser. If he sleeps until five I worry about him. But he doesn't often.

He helps feed cows. He needs his own knife. He has to cut the net wrap. He calls it "nut" wrap. And he insists on cutting every bale. It takes me a lot longer to do chores when he helps. But it makes it enjoyable.

I warned him the other day... Actually I screamed at him. "Stay back dammit! That cow is mean and she'll get you!"

He calmly looked at me and said, "Don't worry. I'm indestructible."

Now, what three year old uses words like that? And he uses some others that I won't repeat.

But his favorite thing is looking at dead cows. Or horses. In our bone pile. All ranchers have a bone pile. It's usually hid from public viewing. But Slate knows where it is. And every day we have to stop there so he can stab the dead cows with his knife. He brought home the jawbone of a calf a couple days ago. Makes a nice toy! Grandma frowned a little, but she did relent and soak it in hilex for half a day.

She thinks that day care would be a little too tame for Slate after spending days with Baboo!

Enjoy Thanksgiving! I will!

Hey Doc, Who's on First?

PRAIRIE DOC

By Jill Kruse, D.O.

Many people are familiar with the classic Abbott and Costello comedy skit "Who's on First?" For those who are not familiar, the routine is a hilarious interaction between the two comedians as they discuss players on a baseball team while using confusing references such as "who's on first" and "what's on second." The audience can see that Abbott believes he is clearly communicating the player names to Costello, but it digresses into a laughable experience of misunderstanding and frustration for both parties. The men become increasingly angry as the conversation goes on and each feel that the other is not listening.

This situation may be funny in the world of entertainment, but it can be disastrous when it happens between doctor and patient. At times, conversation in the exam room can inadvertently go down a similar path of confusion. I recall one such experience when I was showing an x-ray to a patient. I pointed out, "Here is the fracture." The patient looked at me, gave a sigh of relief and said, "Thank goodness doc, I was afraid you were going to tell me that it was broken." At that moment I realized my choice of words had not provided the clarity I intended. Thankfully, this patient spoke out which alerted me to the misunderstanding allowing me to rectify it immediately.

Those of us in the medical field must be always mindful to ensure that we explain things in clear, everyday language. I apologize for our failures, which do happen. I also ask for your help. Doctors are human and we may incorrectly assume that our patients understand what we are saying, especially if our patients do not tell us otherwise.

Healthcare is a partnership which requires communication from both patient and doctor. It is important to recognize that not all cultures and generations feel empowered to question a doctor. Other patients hesitate to ask what they feel might be perceived as a "silly" question. In addition, patients have varying levels of education and experience when it comes to participating in medical conversations. Sometimes it helps the patient to have a family member or friend in the room to help the patient feel at ease and convey information.

Doctors strive to be sensitive to these situations, to welcome and encourage questions, then listen closely when the patient speaks. No doctor I know will intentionally or maliciously confuse a patient. We welcome your participation so both patient and doctor can best understand what care is needed. Let's work together and keep the conversation going to make sure we both know "who's on first" and "what's on second" when it comes to your health."

Jill Kruse, D.O. is part of The Prairie Doc® team of physicians and currently practices family medicine in Brookings, South Dakota. For free and easy access to the entire Prairie Doc® library, visit www.prairiedoc.org and follow Prairie Doc® on Facebook featuring On Call with the Prairie Doc® a medical Q&A show streaming most Thursdays at 7 p.m. central.

OUR OUTDOORS

First Followt

BY NICK SIMONSON
DAKOTA EDGE OUTDOORS

In mid-February my mind often wanders toward spring and, if allowed, into the warmth of summer and thoughts of fishing trips past under the heat of a shining sun.

One of my most formative fishing memories is that of catching bluegills off the dock on those sunny days that blur into the three-month span that is June, July and August, which frequently found me staying at my grandparents' lake cabin.

I would bait my Aberdeen hook with worms and nightcrawlers my grandfather dug up for me from the cool dirt patch in the small opening in the woods of the back lot of his lake cabin. I would cast them out for countless hours of entertainment, burning away the day as the sun scorched my skin and lightened my hair.

Sometimes I'd unclip my bobbers and cast out my offering only to pull the bait away from the fish, trying to steer clear of the smaller panfish and connect with the bigger bluegills that lurked near the bottom of the school or out toward its edges.

Other times, I'd simply cast the bait out and reel it back in as fast as I could watching the bait spiral like the propeller on a boat motor as the horde of hungry sunnies would steam in a phalanx behind it. One or two occasionally accelerating from the group would nip at the whirling worm on the golden hook. I didn't know it at the time, but the concept was basically the modern slow-death rig now widely employed by many in-the-know walleye anglers.

In the waters of the past, before a city sewer was installed around the lake, the summer weeds grew thick and the dog days of the season were marked with a shade of green on the surface. There, on either the inside or outside edge of the underwater jungle which touched and matted up forming a ceiling between lake and sky, the occasional pike found respite from the heat due to the inflowing creek about 100 yards down the beach.

Undoubtedly, they picked off their fair share of the small panfish that tucked into the shade of the dock and boat lifts as well. Stunted as many of them were, the one-to-two-pound hammerhandles provided a certain upsizing of excitement for a young angler on summer vacation, and long before the lake was stocked with muskies. I recall the first time my heart leaped into my throat and I watched in terrified excitement as something other than a sunfish showed up in the shallows.

Not unlike the hundreds of times I'd done it before, I cast a spiraling worm offering out into the water and buzzed it back to the dock, feeling the occasional nip and pull of the faster fish in the school of sunnies.

About halfway back I could tell most of my bait had been cleaned off by the bluegills and felt the simple drag of the bare hook in the water. In the light between the puffy summer afternoon clouds, I saw the glint of the hook and on the edge of the shade a dark form took shape under the greening surface, following the tiny golden piece of terminal tackle inch-for-inch.

As my nerves took over, I sped up and the fish's pursuit did as well, as the distance closed between the flashing hook and my position on the dock. My heart rate soared, and I kept reeling as the fish accelerated and zipped between my legs and under the worn wooden platform and algae-coated metal frame of the dock, leaving me with my first adrenaline rush of an encounter with something other than a bluegill.

Since that time, I've had countless other close calls. Following smallmouth bass that slash the surface as a plug is hastily retrieved for another cast, muskies in that same water which have now replaced the population of hammerhandles as the apex predators, and yes, even aggressive pike which have turned on a hooked and struggling walleye at the side of a canoe.

Each of them are etched in the fishing memories in my mind, and some in the stories I've written over the last two decades. None, however, stand out like that first one coming under the warmth of the summer sun which sent my pulse as high as the temperature on that mid-August afternoon ... in our outdoors.
