OUR OUTDOORS NICK SIMONSON

Our Outdoors: Home & Away

BY NICK SIMONSON

I'll be the first to tell you that I'm a homebody when it comes to the outdoors. It doesn't take much for me to get lost chasing walleyes along the river winding through town, casting after trout in the nearby lakes, or picking off a few hungry bass as summer progresses on nearby waters for large-mouths and smallmouths alike. In the fall, I don't travel far for hunting, heading a few minutes northeast for a readily available shot at sharpies in September, and southwest about a tumbler's worth of coffee to chase pheasants in October. My deer permit area in November makes coming home and rolling out just as easy. The things I've learned close to home have always paid off on the road, despite being a reluctant traveler.

I've been lucky to the point in the four places I've called home to feel as if I've had the best of just about everything within an hour's drive or so. As a result, I've been quick to write off a trip anywhere, whether that's for fish or game. It may be the simple joy of multiple pan-fish on the end of the line in a single outing or knowing that catching the biggest fish in a small lake or stream is good enough for me. The draw of the mountains half a day away just means that's 12 hours less time to actually be catching fish than what

I could do practically out of my front door. I'm content crushing cattails and stomping field grass with my lab in the fall, knowing that while populations of birds may be higher elsewhere, the windshield time is far outweighed by the chance to take a shot on the wing nearby and maybe be home in time for lunch with a story to tell. It's truly a "bird in the hand" scenario, or fish or deer, depending on the calendar.

However, there are those places a distance away that have stuck with me. The winding streams through the hilly driftless area of Wisconsin where a buddy and I caught wild brown trout on the fly stick in my outdoor memories like emeralds in a crown.

Leaping smallmouth bass on legendary Lake Erie over Memorial Day weekend punctuated a two-week trial in northwestern Pennsylvania while on a business trip. The menagerie of saltwater species – snook, redfish, mackerel and bluefish – caught along the shores of Florida's gulf coast while there with family have left their marks in my memory book and in my fly box. The spaces and species are so different from home, but to learn them and catch them, I take what I have learned there and again go through the trial-and-error efforts, starting with what I know.

Fish are fish everywhere, they spawn, eat, strike and then shut down under a cold front in one spot much like they do in another. However, changes in sites and species can and do require alterations in presentations and sometimes entire plans. While I like to push the tactics I've developed and honed on my home waters, sometimes a new spot at the end of a road trip or an airplane flight requires a breaking down and building up of tactics to match the changes in scenery or a food source. As the reset takes hold and new tweaks on old tricks are developed over a few days on an unfamiliar flow, the learning experience that traveling - whether the goal of the journey is to find fish, or they are just incorporated into a day or two on a family vacation - helps expand boundaries and create new memories.

With the unofficial start to summer looming in the days ahead and travel expected to be at a fever pitch as people ditch the confinement requirements of the previous year, take the knowledge from home on the road with you like that old reliable Igloo cooler in the back of the car stocked with your favorite drinks and snacks, but know that adjusting and experimenting with those tried-and-true patterns and items of tackle or using something completely new may be in the cards. Make the most of the opportunities both while at home and away and add some memories and new tactics that might just become as much of a go-to as a favorite nearby water...in our outdoors.

Brad's Bites: A Wild Week

BY BRAD DURICK

It's been a wild week. We were blessed with rains in the northern Red River valley that gave the catfish a fresh drink. However, water levels remain seriously low from Oslo to the south and heavy rains brought Drayton up nearly four feet but the river is quickly falling now. The recent cool temperatures have brought water temperatures from a high of about 68 down into the low 60s. The forecast looks to be cool for the next few days, but this is not a bad thing as it will prolong the prespawn bite.

Catfish have been a bit confused with all the weather and are hanging out in slower current areas and even very shallow. Sit times have been tough to nail down but it appears that 20-30 minutes is the ticket to decide what is going on. Baits have changed to anything fresh cut this week. When an aggressive fish hits they tend to mean it. There has been some picking and pecking after you catch the aggressive fish. Just move onto another spot rather than wait for those fish to go.

The river remains extremely low and caution should be exercised when boating (especially below dams) to ensure the safety you and your equipment.

Brad Durick is a Dakota Edge Outdoors contributing writer and licensed ND fishing guide specializing in the trophy catfish of the northern Red River.

Bigger catfish are becoming more aggressive on the Red River, taking to fresh cutbait in the past week. DEO Photo by Brad Durick.

Staigle family facing challenges

BY CINDY PETERSON

Amber Staigle swears she will never tell her son Conley to be quiet again.

Ever. There was a time when Conley was a talkative boy. Now, not so much. Each day Amber longs to hear her son's chatter.

Conley was diagnosed with a brain tumor this spring. The 3-year-old underwent surgery, getting the majority of it removed. He is currently participating in physical, occupational and speech therapy. Conley came out of surgery with physical and speech limitations, but Amber and her husband Dan are hoping and praying their son will emerge back to an active kid.

"He used to talk a lot," Amber said. "I will never tell him to be quiet ever again."

Conley had been in the hospital since April 22. After almost a month, the Staigles were able to return home with their son on May 21.

Medical debt has piled up for the Staigles. A benefit account has been set up at Security First Bank in Center and all its other branches. A fundraiser supper will take place toward the end of June and that date will be announced later. Conley also has a gofundme.com account set up, listed under Superman Conley's Medical Journey.

"You don't ever think something like this will ever happen to you," Amber said. "Nobody is invincible."

The Staigles noticed Conley started getting hand tremors a little more than a year ago, which made it hard for him to drink from a cup. He was tested for other issues, such as diabetes. Then he developed issues with his eyes, which resulted in him getting fitted for glasses. It's still unknown if his eye problems are connected to the tumor. Shortly after getting glasses, Conley went through a fainting episode.

Conley also struggled sleeping at night. He also had difficulties in walking and the balance on his right side was off, which caused him to fall often. His head hurt - bad. Unknown at the time, the headaches were caused by fluid on the brain.

All of this prompted doctors to run an MRI, which resulted in the discovery of a tumor on his brain stem. The surgery, which was held on April 26, removed all but a sliver of the tumor. A small portion of the tumor remains because it was so close to one of the main arteries of the brain.

"We told the doctor to do what she can," Amber said. "We would like his brain to be as functional as it can be after something like this. If he would need chemo or radiation, it would be small enough to where that would take care of it. At this point, he's not doing any chemo or radiation, but he will need frequent MRIs to make sure it's not growing."

On May 10, Conley had another procedure to release fluid and pressure.

The Staigles are waiting for DNA test results from the Mayo Clinic to find out exactly what condition Conley has and what caused it. For now, he's been undergoing lots of therapy to help

Orange you glad you decided to plant carrots?

Gardeners of a particular era will remember pulling a carrot out of the ground, wiping it across their pant leg and enjoying the crunch of the first carrot harvest of the season. Carrots are easy to grow and are the very last crop we pull from our garden in the fall.

There are climates warm enough to store carrots in the ground all winter, but my spouse made me promise never to do that again. He said it wasn't effortless chopping them out of the frozen North Dakota soil.

When people tell me they have no luck with carrots, I can safely assume a few things they are doing incorrectly. First, germination of those tiny seeds takes a little doing, and second, you must thin them early, so they have more room to grow.

Today's carrot is a relative of wild Queen's Anne lace, and that is apparent if you have ever forgotten to dig out a carrot and it goes to seed. Carrots are biennial vegetables and do not produce seeds the first year. However, if you leave that carrot in the ground and it does go to seed, lookout – you will have rogue carrots everywhere.

Before we plant those lovely carrots, we should choose a variety. And there are many varieties of carrots, each with its own set of healthy vitamins. Orange carrots are considered the most healthy because of alpha and beta carotene, which gives them the orange color. Before cultivated garden carrots were available, a wide array of colors grew in the wild – white, red, yellow and purple.

I love purple carrots, and two of my favorites are Purple Haze or Cosmic Purple, as they are purple through and through. Some carrots only have purple skin that turns orange when heated.

Carrots need well-worked light soil to grow correctly. If your carrots have "legs," your soil is too hard, impenetrable by the root, so it begins to grow in any direction it can. There's nothing wrong with these vegetables, but cleaning takes longer.

Carrots also don't mind a little cold weather and can be planted three weeks before the last frost and harvested after a fall freeze, or in our case, that October blizzard.

Now about planting those tiny seeds. First, wet your furrow well. The moisture will keep those seeds on the ground until you get them covered before our famous North Dakota wind carries them to South Dakota. If you are covering your rows with soil, make sure it is not too deep. Rather than bury my carrot seeds, I use some well-dried and chemical-free grass clippings to cover the rows. This keeps them moist until they germinate, and you can remove the grass when seedlings are an inch or taller.

These are some of the carrots grown on the Root Seller's Farm. We are still enjoying the last of these carrots from harvest in October.

Since I love to experiment, which is how gardening works – whatever works for you is the correct way. Someone posted a video on a Facebook group about gel-planting carrots. It sounded ingenious, and I thought I would try it myself.

Soak your carrot seed in water until you can see at least one seed germinate. This will not happen overnight, so plan. Using one tablespoon of cornstarch to one cup of water, cook until thick – you know, as in gravy. Allow to cool. Then drain the water off the carrot seed, mix with the gel in a heavy zip-lock bag and cut off the tip. Pipe the ingredients into the furrow. The seed flows out fairly evenly, and the gel will keep it moist until it settles in. Okay, so I didn't have much luck with the bag; I found a squeeze bottle for frosting, cut the tip a little bigger and like mustard on a hot dog bun, I spread those carrot seeds. It was so much fun.

After those babies germinate and stabilize, they need room to grow. Thinning row crops was such a painful lesson to learn when I began gardening independently, but it is the key to good-sized beets, radishes and carrots. Using manicure scissors, I get down to their level and clip out every other plant. This accomplishes thinning without disturbing the soil and uprooting the ones you are expecting to produce. It also makes some people crazy, lying in the garden like that.

If you garden in a box, select a short fat carrot variety like Scarlet Nantes. Most of those boxes, the ones on the legs, are not too deep. And, go ahead and do it; it's not too late to plant carrots. My mother used to plant her entire garden at the end of May, and everything produced just fine.

Live a little and try planting a package of rainbow-colored carrots this year. Eat them along the way, but if you wait until after the first good frost to harvest the bulk of them, the flavor will be sweeter. In the fall, we will talk about recipes and storage for your colored carrot crop.

Note: Sue Balcom, the owner of the Root Sellers Farm, is a blogger, author of four books about German-Russian food and its culture, farmer's marketer, fiber artist and self-described bread head living north of Mandan with her handyman, J.C. and a cat named Walter White.

The second printing of Sue's most popular book on German-Russian food culture, "Ewiger Saat" or "Everlasting Yeast," will be available sometime this summer.

Memorial Services

There will be Memorial Day Services in Hazen and Stanton to honor those who have given their lives in service to our country.

Hazen will hold an honor service at the Hazen City Cemetery, starting at 10 a.m. Monday. There will not be any ceremony at the high school prior to that, or any lunch, just the graveside service. The American Legion Clark-Grosz Post 189 hosts the service, including a benediction, the playing of Taps, the laying of the Wreath on the grave of the Unknown Soldier, a gun salute and the raising of the flag.

The Stanton American Legion and Auxiliary will hold their Memorial Day Service at 10 a.m. as well. It will be at the Stanton Civic Center. Jerry Saude, treasurer for the Western North Dakota Honor Flight, will be feaured. Western North Dakota Honor Flight is a non-profit organization created solely to honor America's veterans for all their sacrifices and they raise funds to transport our heroes to Washington, D.C. to visit and reflect at their memorials. There will be an opportunity to contribute to this program at the service.

There will also be a hamburger/hot dog lunch provided after the service and people are asked to bring a side dish (salad, bars, etc.) for the meal.
