Memorial Day

BY DEAN MEYER

Hello, This morning I was in a hurry to do an article. Because it's Friday and they need it in about ten minutes. So, I cheated. I looked through some old articles and found an article that meant a lot to me. And with the forecast for wind and rain, it fit this weekend, too. I'm not sure, but I think the Kelli in the article is a married mother now. And I'm sure this will bring a smile to her and hers.

Stay safe out there people. I hope you had a great Memorial Day! Boy, if you liked it windy, you should have been about as happy as a horse in an oat bin.

If you were at the lake, I'm sure you were sitting in a camper full of kids, wondering how in the heck you ever talked yourself into spending a hundred grand on a pickup, boat, and nice camper with extending sides. If that was you, you did not have as nice a weekend as previously planned. If you had planned on just spraying those last couple fields, attending the Memorial Service at the Legion, and doing odd jobs, you probably got it all done but the spraying.

I announced a High School Rodeo at Dickinson. Now, I've been to hundreds of high school rodeos. I've been to long ones, short ones, cold ones, hot ones. I've been to high school rodeos in North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Colorado, and Oklahoma. I've rodeoed from can see to can't see and sometimes into the night.

I remember riding bulls in the headlights of the few pickups that were left at New Town one year. A young man marked eighty something on a bull and not a soul saw it. But it sure sounded like he was bucking. I remember when you couldn't see across the arena at New Salem because of the snow.

But yesterday in Dickinson was one for the record books. Fifty plus mph winds. Now, if you're a young lady, roping against a fifty mph gale, riding a horse going twenty-five, it is a little tough to control that loop. But we had girls that got it done.

And if you think it's easy, just jump in your outfit, take her out on the interstate, and try to rope the speed limit signs while driving seventy-five. And hope the cops aren't out. Oh yeah, and hope you don't catch one!

We roped calves and steers and rode bucking horses. We rode broncos and bears and bulls. We tied goats and ran barrels. And not one kid complained. A few parents were a little disgusted when we had to hold the poles down with sandbags, but then, parents always complain more than kids.

And you know what we did? We put on a nine-hour rodeo with 250 great kids in less than seven hours. Without one injury. I was proud of every one. But you know what the highlight of the day was? Kelli.

She's a young lady that doesn't weigh eighty-five pounds dripping wet. A year or two ago she was tying goats and running barrels and going to the dance after the rodeo. She was roping calves and hollering at her sisters.

And yesterday she came up in the crow's nest and gave me a Cuban cigar. Now neither one of us smoke, and she didn't have a baby. But she gave it as a friend. A friend home on leave from spending three months in Iraq. An eighty-five pound goat tyer who, in a couple of weeks, is packing up and going back to Iraq, where she is dodging bullets and bombs and packing guns and building schools and water systems. While we're worrying about dry weather and the wind on the lake. I think sometimes I worry about the wrong things.

And that is what Memorial Day is supposed to be about. To remind us of what others gave and are giving. Remember them in your prayers.

Later, Dean

OUR OUTDOORS

Home & Away

BY NICK SIMONSON
DAKOTA EDGE OUTDOORS

I'll be the first to tell you that I'm a homebody when it comes to the outdoors. It doesn't take much for me to get lost chasing walleyes along the river winding through town, casting after trout in the nearby lakes, or picking off a few hungry bass as summer progresses on nearby waters for largemouths and smallmouths alike.

In the fall, I don't travel far for hunting, heading a few minutes northeast for a readily available shot at sharpies in September, and southwest about a tumbler's worth of coffee to chase pheasants in October. My deer permit area in November makes coming home and rolling out just as easy. The things I've learned close to home have always paid off on the road, despite being a reluctant traveler.

I've been lucky to the point in the four places I've called home to feel as if I've had the best of just about everything within an hour's drive or so. As a result, I've been quick to write off a trip anywhere, whether that's for fish or game.

It may be the simple joy of multiple panfish on the end of the line in a single outing or knowing that catching the biggest fish in a small lake or stream is good enough for me. The draw of the mountains half a day away just means that's 12 hours less time to actually be catching fish than what I could do practically out of my front door.

I'm content crushing cattails and stomping field grass with my lab in the fall, knowing that while populations of birds may be higher elsewhere, the windshield time is far outweighed by the chance to take a shot on the wing nearby and maybe be home in time for lunch with a story to tell. It's truly a "bird in the hand" scenario, or fish or deer, depending on the calendar.

However, there are those places a distance away that have stuck with me. The winding streams through the hilly driftless area of Wisconsin where a buddy and I caught wild brown trout on the fly stick in my outdoor memories like emeralds in a crown.

Leaping smallmouth bass on legendary Lake Erie over Memorial Day weekend punctuated a two-week trial in northwestern Pennsylvania while on a business trip. The menagerie of saltwater species — snook, redfish, mackerel and bluefish — caught along the shores of Florida's gulf coast while there with family have left their marks in my memory book and in my fly box.

The spaces and species are so different from home, but to learn them and catch them, I take what I have learned there and again go through the trial-and-error efforts, starting with what I know.

Fish are fish everywhere, they spawn, eat, strike and then shut down under a cold front in one spot much like they do in another. However, changes in sites and species can and do require alterations in presentations and sometimes entire plans. While I like to push the tactics I've developed and honed on my home waters, sometimes a new spot at the end of a road trip or an airplane flight requires a breaking down and building up of tactics to match the changes in scenery or a food source.

As the reset takes hold and new tweaks on old tricks are developed over a few days on an unfamiliar flow, the learning experience that traveling — whether the goal of the journey is to find fish, or they are just incorporated into a day or two on a family vacation — helps expand boundaries and create new memories.

With the unofficial start to summer looming in the days ahead and travel expected to be at a fever pitch as people ditch the confinement requirements of the previous year, take the knowledge from home on the road with you. But know that adjusting and experimenting with those tried-and-true patterns and items of tackle or using something completely new may be in the cards.

Make the most of the opportunities both while at home and away and add some memories and new tactics that might just become as much of a go-to as a favorite nearby water ... in our outdoors.

DILL PICKLE PASTA SALAD

By Together as a Family

Ingredients

- 1 box (16 oz) rotini pasta
- 1/3 cup dill pickle juice from the pickle jar
- 2 cups chopped baby dill pickles
- 1 block (8 oz) Colby Jack cheese cubed small
- 1 small white onion finely chopped

Creamy Dill Dressing:

- 1 cup mayonnaise
- 1/2 cup sour cream
- 1/3 cup dill pickle juice from the pickle jar
- 2 tablespoons chopped fresh dill (or 1 tablespoon dried dill)
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon pepper

Directions:

Cook pasta according to package directions. Don't forget to add some salt to the boiling water before adding the pasta. I add about 1 teaspoon. When pasta is done cooking drain pasta and rinse with cold water. Move rinsed cooked pasta to a mixing bowl and pour 1/3 cup of pickle juice over it. Stir to combine. Let it sit while you prepare the rest. Chop the dill pickles and cheese into small cubes. Finely chop the white onion. Drain the pasta again that was sitting in the pickle juice. Add it back to the mixing bowl. Add in the pickles, cheese, and white onion. Stir to combine. In a small bowl combine all the dressing ingredients and pour over the pasta salad. Stir everything together to combine well. Salad can be eaten right away but I prefer it cold, and if you do too, then cover it and refrigerate it for 1-2 hours.

FROSTED LEMONADE

By Life Love Llz

Ingredients

- 1 cup Fresh Squeezed Lemon Juice*
- 1/2 cup Sugar
- 2 1/2 cups Water
- Vanilla Ice Cream**

Directions:

Add lemon juice and sugar to pitcher. If you are using bottled lemon juice, increase amount to 1 1/2 cups. Stir until sugar is dissolved. Add water and stir until well mixed. Refrigerate at least 1 hour to chill. Add 1 cup chilled lemonade and 2 cups (about 4 scoops) ice cream to blender. Pour into cup and garnish with lemon slice. **Use good quality, real ice cream made from cream and not "frozen dessert".

Belhammer saves child DAKOTA DATEBOOK

Dakota Datebook written by Merry Helm

May 31, 2021 — Gordon Keeney was aboard the steamboat Dakota when he witnessed a dramatic rescue attempt by a burly German immigrant. Seventy-six years later, Keeney's written account was published in the Fargo Forum.

In 1874, the Dakota was steaming north down the Red River with a maximum load of 175 Canadian, Scotch, British and Irish passengers. Because of the crowded conditions below, Keeney wrapped himself in his buffalo robe and spent his time in the open air of the hurricane deck. Sprawled on that deck, forward of the stern, were between 10 and 15 prisoners in shackles and handcuffs who were being transported to Pembina for trial on offenses ranging from larceny to murder. A U.S. Marshal had given strict orders to shoot any prisoners who tried to escape.

Keeney wrote, "Yet a cheerful, story-telling, card-playing bunch of irresponsible humanity they were, with one exception, Charles Belhammer. This man, who lay on his blanket next to the low railing... some 20 feet above the... water, was partly, if not entirely, a victim of circumstances. Stranded in mid-winter at Fort Seward when the (NP) railroad ceased to operate west of Fargo, he had been unable to work to keep his wife and young child from want."

Keeney explained that Belhammer couldn't find transportation back to Fargo, and when he ran out of supplies, he appealed for food at the post. He was denied. Finally, he broke into the commissary and stole some food and clothing. When he was found out, he was jailed in Fargo.

On this date, two days into the journey, the call for breakfast had just sounded as the boat was negotiating a rough patch through the Goose River rapids. Children would grab hold of overhanging tree branches and let themselves be dragged across the deck toward the prisoners. Suddenly, a Mrs. White cried that her nine-year-old child had fallen overboard. Keeney heard Belhammer tell his guard, "... don't shoot, Ollie," and he threw himself over the railing into the river. A bullet splintered the rail as he dropped out of sight.

The only thing keeping the little girl afloat was air trapped beneath her skirts. Keeney wrote, "Belhammer was striking out sideways with his hands, which were held close together by the handcuffs. He seemed to hold his own against the current, for the child drifted towards him, and just as (she) sank out of sight, Belhammer let himself under."

"When he came up," Keeney continued, "he had the child in his hands, and with a backward fling he threw (her) across his right shoulder, holding on by taking a firm grip of (her) dress band with his teeth."

Belhammer started toward the boat, which was sputtering to reverse direction. The girl panicked, and because of his shackles, Belhammer lost his balance and both went under.

When Belhammer surfaced again, he had only a swatch of the girl's dress clenched in his teeth. The girl was gone. He tried to wrench free of his cuffs but only drew blood.

Then he spotted the girl's arm shoot out of the muddy water, and the passengers spotted his leg irons as he dove down. The crowd had given them up for dead when Belhammer suddenly resurfaced with the little girl. Again clutching her dress with his teeth, he struck out downstream toward a rescue boat that had been dispatched.

Back on board, the ship's blacksmith was called to remove Belhammer's handcuffs, and a fellow passenger, Federal Judge Barnes, summarily declared the prisoner innocent of all charges.

Belhammer's name was reported in many different fashions, with his last name spelled Belhammer, Belheimer, Belhymer and Billhymer.

Newspaper accounts also reported his first name as Charles, Victor or George.

There also exists an alternate cause for Belhammer's arrest, which states that Belhammer surprised a man who was rifling through his duffel bag. He clubbed the man and was arrested for murder. This version isn't supported by newspaper accounts.

DAKOTA EDGE

Considering Carp

BY NICK SIMONSON
DAKOTA EDGE OUTDOORS

There's an encounter each spring that reminds me of how lucky we are to have ugly fish. They don't glisten in gold like walleyes, sparkle with silver like a white bass, or even bring up the base of the podium like a smallmouth bass bedecked in bronze.

Instead, they fight hard, provide fast action, and often remind us of the basics of angling and where many of us got our start. These not-so-pretty fish also reinforce the idea that beauty is truly in the eye of the beholder.

Whether it's a carp that casually inhaled a crawler-tipped jig while working a break for walleyes, or a school of bullheads swarming a slipfloat on the warm surface water of a small lake, these interactions make me thankful for ugly fish — even when most other times they're a nuisance.

In the chilly waters of this early spring, I had downsized to a light rod in an attempt to connect with some walleyes on my home flow of the Sheyenne River. While I elicited a few slow, tail-grabbing takes by some of the smaller fish and the most notable catch was a muskie in the mid-30-inch range — believe it or not — that fish was not the hardest fighting catch of the day.

Having just boated a keeper-size walleye at our final stop for the morning under the trestles of the Hi Line bridge towering over the Sheyenne River, I set the hook of the small jig into a heavy opponent just out from where I had landed the previous fish.

Thinking for certain the challenger on the other end was the female companion of the small male walleye from the shallower side of the spot just waiting to go up to meet for the spawn, my pulse began racing.

Each slow pull and solid headshake convinced me that it was an epic-sized fish with the silver eyes, golden body and white-tipped tail, and I adjusted the already-strained drag on the reel as the rod doubled over and arched under the boat.

For five minutes or so, the fish pulled upstream and then back down, as I did my best to not let her break the undersized four-pound test monofilament which connected us. As the battle played out, it began to climb the ranks as one of my best in recent memory.

Finally, as the fish came back downstream and out from under the hull, it surfaced and the vision of gold struck me, however it wasn't the gold of a walleye, but rather a common carp. Immediately my pulse dropped as if I had sat in my old blue La-Z-Boy recliner and I felt the adrenaline rush drain from my cheeks as my brother netted the carp.

It wasn't what I had thought it would be, but it provided all the fight I could have ever hoped for in any such contest between angler and fish, and at the very least, provided a renewed appreciation for the bottom-feeder's might.

Where anglers like me may be disappointed in such a catch, I recall encountering a shore angler on Lake Oahe while my buddy and I bounced spinners along a breakline a few dozen yards out from his long rods rigged with electronic pagers. As we went back and forth, we watched him set the hook on one particularly large opponent, and when he got it to shore he was shocked at the catch.

To us, it was just a carp — a fish that paled in comparison to the livewell loaded with the walleyes and crappies we were catching — but to the man on shore, it was a miraculous catch. As it turned out, the carp wasn't just a carp, but rather a mirror carp, and when he told us he hadn't caught one in many years, his voice cracked with the excitement of someone who had just landed any state record gamefish of higher renown.

My buddy snapped a photo for him and texted it to his provided number for the angler to remember the moment as he released it, proving once again that even the ugliest fish have a place in our angling world.

Whether they're the subject of alternate angling forms, such as bowfishing or seen solely as a source of garden fertilizer when caught, carp do have their place for some. They possess incredible strength to offer others looking for something else, but finding a heart-pounding fight with an unseen opponent. And their beauty lies in that battle, and in the eyes of those that behold them, and perhaps hold them in higher esteem than most. On occasion, I count myself among them.

Aquatic Nuisance Species the Focus May 16-22

NDGF NEWS

North Dakota has seen an increase in aquatic nuisance species in the last decade, yet the state remains in pretty good shape with the low number of waterbodies with invasive species.

Even so, public awareness about ANS, including zebra mussels, and the actions that help prevent their spread, remains a priority of the North Dakota Game and Fish Department. All people who recreate on North Dakota waters, from anglers, waterfowl hunters, to pleasure boaters, play such a huge role in preventing the spread of ANS. And the way that they do this is by being informed.

Ben Holen, Game and Fish Department ANS coordinator said state, local and federal partners will join Game and Fish May 16-22 during Aquatic Nuisance Species Awareness Week in the continued educational effort of preventing the introduction and spread of ANS in North Dakota waters.

This Department's ongoing, statewide ANS communications effort, which has been repeatedly bolstered over the years, continues and seems even more relevant today with the arrival of zebra mussels in some North Dakota waters.

Adult zebra mussels were first discovered in North Dakota in the Red River in 2015. In the last handful of years, these exotics, which cause major infrastructure problems and a variety of unwanted influences in natural underwater environments, have been discovered elsewhere in the state, Lake Ashtabula and Lake LaMoure included.

"Education is our number one priority at the Game and Fish Department because everybody plays a part and must be educated on the issue," Holen said. "This is a citizens of North Dakota issue because aquatic nuisance species can affect citizens directly or indirectly in the state."

Don't Fall Prey to the 5-second Rule

PRAIRIE FARE

By Julie Garden-Robinson, Food and Nutrition Specialist

NDSU Extension

"Where's that national award I won for you?" my daughter asked.

"My plaques are in the boxes in my closet," I said.

I think I might wrap it and give her the plaque this year for her high school graduation. She and the rest of my family certainly have inspired me many times in the years I have written this column.

I should have guessed my daughter would go on to enjoy theater roles and comedy improvisation because of this award-winning "scene." I've updated the food safety tips.

"Would you like pancakes today?" my then-4-year-old asked as I entered our living room.

"Sure, that would be nice," I said. "What kind of toppings do you have?"

"Today we have blueberries, raspberries and strawberries," she noted as she pointed to an imaginary menu on the wall.

"I'll have two pancakes with blueberries," I said.

"We're all out of blueberries," she announced.

"Okay, I'll have raspberries," I said.

"The raspberries fell on the floor," she exclaimed, wrinkling her nose. "They're dirty. Really, really dirty!"

"When was the last time this restaurant was inspected, anyway?" I asked.

"You can have strawberries," she said, ignoring my question.

"They didn't fall on the floor, did they?" I asked.

She grinned and left the room to get my food. I'd have to say those were the best imaginary pancakes and strawberries I ever had.

I was happy to hear that my young daughter had not fallen prey to the "five-second rule." According to this often-quoted rule, you have a few seconds to pluck food from the floor before it becomes contaminated. Think again.

Several years ago, a high school student from Chicago put the rule to the test during an internship at an Illinois university. She surveyed people and learned that women were more likely to eat food that fell on the floor. She also learned that cookies and candy were more likely to be retrieved than vegetables. Imagine that.

She sterilized ceramic tiles, inoculated the tiles with E. coli bacteria and then dropped candy or cookies on the tiles. The bad news for food retrievers: Cookies and candy instantly picked up bacteria.

In another test of the famous rule, Clemson University researchers considered the bacteria-transferring properties of several types of flooring, including carpet, wood and tile. The materials were inoculated with salmonella and allowed to stand 24 hours to see if bacteria would survive. The carpet retained the most bacteria, but all the materials retained thousands of bacteria per square centimeter of flooring material.

The researchers dropped bologna and bread on the contaminated flooring material. Within five seconds, the food picked up thousands of bacteria.

Yes, the food that was on the floor longer picked up more bacteria, but don't take that as evidence to retrieve your cookies, sandwiches or other foods. For some types of bacteria, only a few cells can make you sick.

As we've learned from spinach and lettuce foodborne illness outbreaks, washing doesn't always get rid of pathogens (disease-causing organisms) on produce. The best advice: Don't take chances. If you drop food on the floor, toss it in the trash.

Cross-contamination is the transfer of harmful bacteria from surfaces to food or from one food to another. Cross-contamination is one of the leading causes of foodborne illness in the U.S. Consider these tips from the U.S. Department of Agriculture:

Use hot, soapy water and paper towels or clean cloths to wipe up spills or kitchen surfaces. Sanitize kitchen surfaces with a solution of 1 tablespoon of chlorine bleach per gallon of water (less than 1 teaspoon per quart). Or use another cleaner according to the manufacturer's directions. Test a spot before using a sanitizer.

Wash cloths in the hot cycle of your washing machine.

Use clean cutting boards. Use one cutting board for fresh produce and a separate one for raw meat.

Separate meat, poultry and seafood from other foods in your shopping cart and in your shopping bags. Whenever available, place meat packages in plastic bags before placing them in your cart.

Keep raw meat, poultry and seafood in containers or sealed plastic bags on the lowest shelf of your refrigerator to help prevent their juices from dripping on other foods.

Here's a family-favorite pancake recipe to enjoy with strawberries, blueberries or raspberries. You will want to rinse the fruit under running water before serving. If they fall on the floor, you know what to do.

- Buttermilk Pancakes
 2 c. buttermilk (or substitute reconstituted dry buttermilk)
 2 eggs, beaten
 1 tsp. salt
 1 tsp. baking soda
 2 tsp. baking powder
 2 Tbsp. sugar
 1 3/4 c. all-purpose flour
 1 1/2 Tbsp. butter or margarine, melted

Preheat griddle to 375 degrees. Mix buttermilk and eggs together. In separate bowl, stir dry ingredients together (or use a sifter). Stir in buttermilk and egg mixture. Add melted butter and mix. Drop from ladle onto hot griddle, cooking each side about two minutes or until light brown.

Makes four servings. Each serving has 360 calories, 10 grams (g) fat, 55 g carbohydrate and 20% of the daily recommendation for calcium.

The Trojan Endowment Scholarships operate an endowment where only the income is used to award a scholarships each year. Contributions are Tax exempt for State and Federal taxes. Contributions can also be made as pass-through (not endowment) to award scholarships for the current year.

For information on how to establish a Scholarship or Memorial Scholarship for someone in your family, contact current TEF Board president Howard C Anderson Jr. at hoanders@westriv.com or 701-448-2235

How do I become eligible for one of these scholarships?

Applications must be received by April 1st of the current year. The application is available on the web site <https://www.tlm.k12.nd.us/alumni/trojan-endowment/> from the school counselor's office or from hoanders@westriv.com. Assignments are made for the named scholarships based on the student's choice of school, grade point average and major.

Current Scholarship Guidelines:

1. Graduates of Turtle Lake-Mercer High School who are still in school full time, after completing one year of college will be eligible for a scholarship.
2. If the scholarship recipient decides to wait until the second semester of his sophomore year in college to register, the fully awarded scholarship will be honored.
3. When third and fourth year scholarship(s) are made available, all students who have completed two or three years of college are eligible. We encourage everyone eligible to apply as we often have funds available after awarding two scholarships to second year students.
4. Students who have earned 32 college credits while in high school will be eligible to receive a scholarship at the start of their first year in the college setting as they are technically sophomores.
5. Students attending an 18-month technical program will be eligible for a scholarship after completing 9 months of the program.

Please visit our TEF web site at <https://www.tlm.k12.nd.us/page/trojan-endowment> for information. To date the Trojan Endowment Scholarship Fund has assisted TL-TLM graduates with $223,000 for Higher Education.
