A Gardner must become one with the garden to do some early weeding. It also helps to be able to identify new seedlings versus the evil weed.

Profiling a ‘Gardener’

More common than Big Foot sightings in North Dakota are Gardener sightings. Not gardeners, but Gardeners, with a capital G. There’s a difference.

It’s not that people are deliberately hunting for Gardeners with binoculars or digital cameras for scrapbooking. Still, you might just run across one in a crowd, and you need to be able to identify a true “Gardener.” Here’s how.

There are many ways to identify Gardeners versus gardeners. It’s like observing the male species of songbirds, colorful and noticeable, instead of the more subdued color of females. Just saying that gardeners blend in a wee bit more with the landscape than Gardeners do.

If someone says, “I planted tomatoes, but my chickens scratched them out of the ground.” Pass them by. If you hear someone say, “I can’t grow radishes.” Turn around and look elsewhere. Besides comments like these, if a gardener plants in the spring and harvests nothing in the fall because they were too busy boating or something, yeah – sorry.

Here’s how to tell a Gardener, remembering you can’t tell them much.

Real Gardeners do not have green thumbs. Most of us do have cracks in our hands that fill with soil. Over time those cracks deepen, and who knows what insects or nematodes live in there. On a side note, there are many beneficial minerals in the soil absorbed through our hardworking hands. Forget about manicures; Gardeners’ nails are clipped short and unpolished not to attract too much attention.

Gardeners can often be seen at the crack of dawn in PJ’s or robes with a hose in our hand watering flower beds or small gardens. If you notice a robe hanging on a hook with a visible watermark around the hem, you have found a Gardener.

Have you ever observed someone in dress clothes weeding the flowerpots in front of a hotel? Your first thought might be the hotel hires the best-dressed groundskeeper in the whole country. NOPE, that’s a Gardener. Somehow weeds, even those that do not belong to them, compels a Gardener to assist in pulling them out so the flowers can live.

Instead of sporting a sleeve tattoo, Gardener’s arms are a lovely tan color. Well, tan until your reach the middle of the bicep – aka farmer tan. As we age, blemishes and scratches create the unusual roadmap of years pruning gooseberries or repair irrigation lines.

Only a true Gardener will pay $4 for a package of 25 tomato seed, start them indoors in March, plant outside in May, water, weed and fertilize for two months to taste that first red fruit; but won’t pay a penny for a grocery store tomato in winter.

Gardeners have sheds of tools, an abundance of zombie-killing tools such as pitchforks, rakes, serrated trowels, hoes, etc.

Most of us make no plans for Memorial Day weekend because

a. either you didn’t put your whole garden in yet and the danger of frost in North Dakota has finally passed (we hope) or,

b. you lost some stuff to that last sneaky May Freeze, and you happen to have some extra tomato plants and cucumber seeds and need to get them in the ground.

Gardeners are a competitive bunch. If you overhear someone talking about a better method to mulch at church on a Sunday morning or bragging about the size of their radishes harvested before Memorial Day weekend, that’s a Gardener talking. Always looking for a better method of growing the largest first crops of the seasons, a Gardener is always happy to share their latest “discovery.”

Finally, Gardeners are daredevils when it comes to selecting seeds. They will go to great lengths to find vintage seed packets, heirloom varieties and seeds from other continents to try. Then they plant in good faith and hope for the coming harvest. In the end, all Gardeners realize there will come a time in their life when they too will be scoured by winter’s wind and buried in the soil with the hope their life-long work will sprout some new variety of “Gardener.”

Netting out

By NICK SIMONSON

The evolution of the fishing net in the past few decades has leapt from the one-size-fits-all model of an aluminum hoop with a nylon basket of one-inch squares into the branches of an evolutionary tree reaching out across the horizon of angling options.

From ergonomic grips for more stable solo landings, to extendable handles allowing for greater reach from shore or high floating boats, to oversized baskets to cradle today's growing trophy-sized fish such as muskies and sturgeon, there's a landing net to fit all needs, and many models provide a better experience for anglers and the fish they catch.

What follows are some specializations to consider when investing in a new net this season or somewhere down the road.

SOFTEN UP

With the increased practice of catch-and-release, more models have embraced a softer nylon material used to make the basket of the net. Additionally, rubber-coated nylon, or purely rubber baskets provide even greater protection for fish, being less abrasive and more facilitative of a fast release. For fish like northern pike, which tend to rotate once they enter the confines of a net, these materials resist the torque of those species and ultimately do less damage to their slime coats, fins and gills as a result. For those more sensitive fish like trout, the same nets, only smaller, help prevent injury and mortality in those catch-and-release situations. Anglers share in the benefit, as hooks become easier to remove and are less likely to tangle, or tether a thrashing gamefish to a wad of twisted fabric making the process of catch and release much quicker and less stressful.

QUITE A REACH

Nets have become consistently longer in recent years, with many models providing an extendable arm which increase the length with just the push of a tab and a slide of the aluminum handle. This configuration is ideal for shore anglers, particularly those who find themselves on higher banks or casting from angled rip-rap.

What's more, as the back of the boat becomes more and more crowded by larger motors and adjacent kickers, and bigger crafts are designed to float higher in the water, the longer reach helps land fish sooner and more successfully.

For those tactics which employ a lot of line, such as a salmon fly or spoon trolled behind a flasher or dodger, a long-handled net covers the extra distance created by the space between the attractor and the fish as it comes up. Take these elements into consideration and rely on the fact the handle on an extendable net can be retracted into a more compact package for transport, or when not as necessary to fishing success.

GO BIG

Finally, large nets are becoming a requirement for the established and resurgent populations of monster-sized fish taking root in the region's waters and the growing number of anglers pursuing them.

With more than 50 years of muskie stocking creating lakes with fish nearing 60 inches in length, and the same half century boasting restoration projects now resulting in lake sturgeon of 60, 70 and possibly 80 inches in length in some waters, larger nets are becoming all the rage for those pursuing these monsters. Even those models designed for muskie anglers 20 years ago are dwarfed by what is on the market now, and with enhanced mesh designed to live up to the anglers' catch-and-release demands, they are safer for the fish as well.

While they may cost significantly more than a standard, or even extra-large model, today's massive nets for these giants are well worth removing the worry of landing such a fish that occurs as it breaches the surface and second-guesses arise relating to current equipment. When in doubt, go bigger!

This season give consideration to net needs across all facets of fishing. Whether from shore or from boat, in tiny trout streams or massive muskie waters, there's a model to fit every angler's pursuit, and likely a number of species can be handled with these advancements added all in one model. This in turn results in more successful landings, quicker and cleaner releases, a faster return to the water for the fish and to the action for anglers, with the help of a modern net.

CITY OF HAZEN
Arbor Day Proclamation

Whereas, Trees were once scarce on the prairie when early settlers arrived, and the settlers started to annually plant trees for housing, fuel, and protection from the harsh winter environment; and Whereas, Tree planting is an annual tradition and an investment in the City of Hazen's, the state's and the country's future; and Whereas, Tree planting exemplifies Hazen's commitment to honor the past, our willingness to take an active role in the present, and our devotion to influence the future by creating a living legacy; and Whereas, Trees reduce erosion, by wind and water, of our precious topsoil, reduce heating and cooling costs, moderate the temperature, clean the air, and produce oxygen; and Whereas, Trees in our city increase property value, enhance the economic vitality of our business areas, beautify our community, and are a source of peace, joy, tranquility, and spiritual renewal; and Whereas, Hazen has been recognized as a Tree City USA by the National Arbor Day Foundation and desires to continue its tree planting and beautification programs; NOW, THEREFORE, I, Jerry Obenauer, President of the Board of Commissioners for the City of Hazen, do hereby proclaim June 9, 2021

in the City of Hazen, and I urge all citizens to celebrate Arbor Day and support efforts to care for our trees and to support our city's community forestry program; and Further, I urge all citizens to plant trees to promote the well being of the residents in our community both now and for our future generations.
