Carrots: Good for Eyes, Skin and More

PRAIRIE FARE

Whenever I see carrots, I think of a friend of mine. I was a graduate student and she was a technician.

Back in those days, you could smoke cigarettes in the hallways and offices on campus. During breaks, she would smoke cigarettes, and we'd visit in the hallway. I think I breathed a fair amount of secondhand smoke.

Fortunately for her (and me), she decided to quit smoking. She ate a carrot every time she felt the urge to smoke. Eating carrots helped keep her hands and mouth busy. I think we nicknamed her "Bugs Bunny" because she often had a carrot with the green tops attached.

I estimate she ate at least 10 full-size carrots at work and probably more at home. I certainly promote eating more vegetables, but this was carrot-overload.

Before too long, we all noticed the palms of her hands were orange. Soon, her face and arms took on an orange-colored hue.

The condition is called "carotenemia," a skin discoloration that can develop after a few weeks of robust eating of beta-carotene rich foods. Beta-carotene is the pigment found in carrots, pumpkin, squash, sweet potatoes and other vegetables and fruits.

Sometimes infants can turn an orangey color if they are fed too much beta-carotene foods.

The good news is that carotenemia is not dangerous and will resolve itself when "Bugs Bunny" switches to eating a more balanced, varied diet. My friend switched to chewing gum instead of chomping on carrots, and her skin returned to its usual color.

Carrots are nutritious and popular. They are the sixth most popularly consumed vegetable in the U.S. according to the Agricultural Marketing Service. One medium-sized carrot (about 7 inches) has 35 calories and 2 grams (g) fiber, including the type of fiber that may help maintain a healthful blood cholesterol level.

Carrots are notable sources of beta-carotene, which the human body converts to vitamin A, which promotes healthy skin and eyes. Vitamin A helps prevent a condition called "night blindness." If you experience difficulty seeing at night, discuss this with your healthcare provider.

Enjoying plenty of beta-carotene-rich foods certainly won't hurt you. Most of us shortchange ourselves on dark-orange fruits and vegetables.

I find harvesting carrots to be a fun activity, especially if I plant multicolored carrots. What's under that foliage? Purple and red carrots are high in anthocyanin, a pigment that acts as a cancer-fighting antioxidant.

After harvesting, cut about half of an inch from the top of each carrot, removing the greens. Growing up, we raised a lot of carrots and simply removed the excess soil, trimmed the tops and kept them bagged in an extra refrigerator. We had fresh carrots available until springtime.

If you raise small amounts of carrots, cut off the tops, rinse and air-dry them for storage in an air-tight plastic bag in the refrigerator to maintain proper humidity. If the carrots are not in air-tight bags, they may go limp in the refrigerator. Carrots will maintain their freshness longer at or around 32 F.

Carrots are readily available in grocery stores all year. "Baby cut carrots" were introduced in 1986 and result from trimming larger carrots into uniform small carrots. We see them on appetizer trays and in lunch boxes.

We often call the bags of small carrots "baby carrots," but technically, "baby carrots" are immature carrots.

Carrots can be cooked in the oven, microwave, on the stove top or in a slow cooker.

Cut larger carrots into strips or smaller coin shapes depending on the cooking plan. Toss carrots in olive oil, salt, pepper and other seasonings for added flavor. Garlic, balsamic vinegar, butter, brown sugar, honey, maple syrup, lemon zest, chives, green onions and chili powder are good accompaniments to carrots.

Carrots can be preserved by freezing, pressure-canning, pickling or dehydrating.

See www.ag.ndsu.edu/food and check out the "Food Preservation" information. Follow current pressure-canning procedures in the NDSU Extension publication "Home Canning Low-acid Vegetables" (FN173). See "Freezing Vegetables" (FN187) and "Making Pickled Products" (FN189) for additional information about preserving carrots.

How about trying a fall-inspired dinner featuring roasted carrots, meatloaf and baked potatoes? This recipe features "baby carrots," and now you know the rest of the story.

Roasted Dill Carrots

- 36 baby carrots
- 2 tablespoons canola oil or olive oil
- 1/4 teaspoon salt (or less, to taste)
- 1/2 teaspoon black pepper (or to taste)
- 2 tablespoons minced fresh dill (or about 2 teaspoons dried)

Preheat oven to 400 F. Cut baby carrots diagonally. Toss carrots in oil. Season with salt and pepper as desired; toss again. Use sheet pan with parchment paper and transfer carrots in one layer. Roast in oven for one hour or until browned, stirring occasionally. Toss carrots with dill after roasting.

Makes four servings. Each serving has 90 calories, 7 g fat, 8 g carbohydrate, 1 g protein, 3 g fiber and 220 milligrams sodium.

Cold roundup

BY DEAN MEYER

Hello, Getting ready to ride this morning and have had my horse saddled for a couple hours. As I get older, my horse gets saddled earlier. Especially on a cool, breezy fall morning. Giving him time to soak a little bit seems to give him more sense and me more courage. And I'll pull the cinch up a couple more holes before I load him in the trailer and haul him seventy miles. By then, he'll be happy to trot off. I hope.

In the next month most of the fall roundups will be taking place. Ranches will be moving cattle home from summer pastures, weaning calves, preg checking, and getting ready for winter. I used to maintain that we had only two seasons. Haying season, and feeding hay season. Some years they run together.

Fall roundups are always my favorite. Just as harvest is to a farmer, fall roundup is to a rancher. You see the fruits of your labor. You see how that bull you purchased a year and a half ago worked out. You determine if that old cow you let slip by one more year paid her way. You see the calf whose leg you splinted last spring has grown up, and fits with the rest. You recognize the heifer that had the backward calf you saved. Or the heifer calf you gave to your kids. To start their own herd. It's a great time of the year.

The days may be getting shorter, but they are long enough if you're on roundup. You load saddle horses in the dark. And bring them home in the dark. Breakfast is eaten in a hurry as the horses eat their grain. Shirley said Uncle Hugh always made them take extra pancakes in their pockets in case dinner didn't show up. Was a good idea, but I wish I could break her of the habit. It is embarrassing to have your wife pull pancakes out of her pocket when you are at the mall.

The roundup on the reservation would last two weeks. Grandpa Jack or Uncle Hugh would be the boss. Each night, we would find out where we were meeting in the morning. And everyone developed a reputation as to when they would show up. Some would be an hour late, cause their horses always got out during the night. Some had to get kids on the bus. Billy always came in time for dinner. Red and I would race to be first. It got so bad, I would get up at 2 in the morning so I could beat Red. Get to the meeting point and sleep in the pickup for three hours waiting for daylight! Nobody ever said I was real smart.

But there is no better feeling than unloading and trotting down a ridge in the morning, as the sun is just starting to peek up, heading for Big Bottom. Or maybe unloading above Wounded Faces and heading towards the Smith Camp. Riding a good horse, next to a good friend, followed by a good dog.

Bicycles and Bloomers

DAKOTA DATEBOOK

Dakota Datebook written by Merry Helm

October 4, 2021 — In 1895, the New York Tribune reported the bicycle was “of more importance to mankind than all the victories and defeats of Napoleon, with the First and Second Punic Wars... thrown in.” A hundred years later, the Minnesota Historical Society published an article by Bemidji professor Ron Spreng titled: The 1890s Bicycling Craze in the Red River Valley. Spreng’s research revealed many surprises; for example, who would have thought it was bicycle mania that led to the “first concerted movement for improved roads?”

The country’s first cycle, which appeared around 1870, was the “velocipede,” a 150-pound, hand-forged contraption with wooden wheels and solid tires. Six years later, an “ordinary” cycle was displayed at the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition – it was English-made, with a front wheel up to five feet in diameter, with a little trailer wheel to stabilize the ride. The high front wheel made for a fast ride, but unfortunately, it also often led to the dreaded “face in the dirt.” Within a decade, a “safety” bicycle was introduced, using front and rear wheels of the same size, and soon after, inflatable pneumatic tires ended the safety’s jarring, bone-clattering ride.

Clever illustrated ads for the Svensgaard Bicycle Company in Fergus Falls helped launch a cycling craze in the Red River Valley in 1892. An economic depression the following year saw the bicycle quickly fall out of favor, but by the summer of 1894, valley residents were once more enjoying activities like lawn tennis, croquet, baseball and cycling.

The Grand Forks Cycle and Pleasure Club took 10- to 12-mile evening outings “under the captaincy of Mr. Dressen” that resembled military formations. It wasn’t long, though, before cycling took a scandalous turn – ladies starting riding without “escorts of the sterner sex.”

There were about 300 cyclists in Grand Forks by the spring of 1895 – by the end of the summer, that count rose to 500. Businesses stopped referring to bikes as safeties and started calling them “wheels.” Newspapers printed cycling news almost every day during the summer. Cycling clubs quickly sprang up in St. Thomas, Forest River, Jamestown, Fargo, Drayton, Larimore, Minto, Towner, Hillsboro, Neche, Pembina, Dickinson, Church’s Ferry, Park River, Grafton, Gilby, Epworth, Lakota, and Buffalo.

A major topic of discussion concerned the “new woman.” Women finally had a practical reason to wear bloomers (or pantaloons). Bloomers were initially worn under skirts when they were invented, but they created an almost hysterical response in 1852, because “most ladies would not admit they had legs, much less display them.” Forty years later, women found they couldn’t ride their cycles without admitting they had legs. Soon, they defiantly shed their corsets and petticoats and embraced baggy trousers for riding. Of course, the unthinkable became inevitable; women started wearing pantaloons even when they weren’t riding! Others shortened their skirts.

Preachers began proclaiming bicycles were “diabolical devices of the demon of darkness,” and some threatened to excommunicate members who used wheels. Others said the sport was a symbol of human progress and that cycles could be used to carry the gospel to the lost.

Some pastors were fired for riding, but in the Red River Valley at least two ministers took to the road. Reverend Longfellow wheeled to Grand Forks “by the bike route” after delivering a lecture in a Detroit Lakes summer assembly, and Reverend A. T. Foster completed a 100-mile “century” ride from Casselton to Grand Forks.

Now is the Time to Kill Weeds in Lawns

DAKOTA GARDENER

By Tom Kalb, Horticulturist NDSU Extension

Killing weeds with poisonous herbicides requires us to balance the benefits and risks. Everybody wants an attractive and weed-free lawn, but nobody wants to expose themselves to toxic chemicals. Start by having realistic expectations about your lawn. It is not natural and practically impossible to have a lawn without any weeds. Next, use poisonous herbicides only when they are necessary and effective. That said, now is the most effective time to kill weeds in lawns. Timing is critical. The secret to killing perennial weeds such as dandelions and thistles is to get the herbicide down into their roots. The root systems of some weeds are extensive. One Canadian thistle plant, for example, can grow 300 feet of roots in one summer! It is a challenge to get herbicide into a vast network of roots, and that is why now is the best time. The nights are getting longer and the weeds in your lawn know winter is coming. In response, these weeds are beginning to channel their sugars down into their roots to store them over winter. That is perfect for us. If we spray a weed with a systemic herbicide in fall, the weed will accidentally channel it along with its sugars down into its roots. Gotcha!

A spray done once per year—now in fall—can control most broadleaf weeds and minimize our exposure to poisonous chemicals. For most situations this seems like a good balance of benefits and risks.

Another sensible strategy is to spot-spray in weedy areas rather than spraying the entire yard. This will reduce the exposure of us and our landscape plants to herbicides. Trimec formulations are commonly available and work well. These products contain a blend of 2,4-D; mecoprop (MCP) and dicamba. Some of these formulations contain quinclorac as well. Follow the instructions on the label. Mix at the proper rate. Avoid using higher than recommended rates because this may harm nearby landscape plants. Wear protective clothing when spraying poisonous chemicals. Protect yourself by wearing a long-sleeved shirt, long pants, socks, and non-absorbent gloves and shoes. Additional recommendations may be listed on the label. To prevent herbicide drift, do not spray when the temperature is in the high 80s or higher. Spray when winds are calm and use heavy droplets rather than fine mists. Keep children and pets off the lawn at least until the herbicide dries. The label may list longer waiting times. Other cultural practices can reduce our need for herbicides. Mow your turf tall, let grass clippings fall to the soil and fertilize your lawn. These practices can create a thick turf that smothers emerging weeds. If you are going to spray herbicides to kill weeds in your lawn, make it count. Do it safely. Do it now.

Department Continues to Monitor EHD Outbreak

NDGF

The North Dakota Game and Fish Department continues to monitor an ongoing epizootic hemorrhagic disease outbreak. To date, the most heavily affected area is along a portion of the Missouri River extending from just south of Bismarck/Mandan to the Garrison Dam, as well as a smaller area near Williston.

“With the help of public reports, we are able to get a pretty good idea on where the outbreak is occurring,” said Casey Anderson, Department wildlife division chief. “Tracking an outbreak like this would not be possible without the public involvement.”

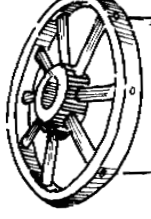

EHD is a naturally occurring virus spread by a biting midge that is often fatal to white-tailed deer, and less commonly to mule deer, pronghorn and elk. Humans are not susceptible to the virus. The Department would like to thank those who have sent in reports. Based on these continuing reports along the Missouri River of white-tailed deer mortality attributed to EHD, the North Dakota Game and Fish Department is now offering refunds for returned licenses from the special herd reduction bow season license holders in south Bismarck/Mandan and northern Burleigh County.

EHD outbreaks rapidly slow after a series of hard frosts kill the midge that transmits the virus. Department personnel will monitor reports they receive through the opening weekend of pheasant season. We will then determine in which units the severity of the outbreak warrants refunds for those seeking refunds. The public is asked to continue reporting any dead deer to the Game and Fish Department through the online wildlife mortality reporting system at gf.nd.gov/mortality-report.

Not responsible for accidents. No items removed until paid for.

I would like to thank the Washburn Lions Club for putting on the benefit to help with my medical costs. I would also like to thank everyone who contributed items to the silent auction. I cannot express how grateful I am to live in such a supportive community. Washburn people are the best. I wish I could thank each and every one of you personally. May God bless each and every one of you.
