Prairie Fare: Are You Getting Your Omega-3 Fats?

PRAIRIE FARE

“How many servings of seafood and fish did you eat during the past week?” The presenter posed this question to attendees.

Unfortunately, I was not meeting the goal. Would you meet the goal of two servings of fish or seafood a week? That’s about eight ounces weekly.

The palm of an average adult’s hand is the visual representation of a “serving” for fish or seafood.

I put fish on my home menu that day to join our usual mix of meat, poultry, beans, nuts and seeds as protein sources.

Fresh, canned and frozen fish and seafood all count toward the goal. Canned and frozen fish usually offer money savings too.

Why do nutrition experts recommend eating more fish and seafood? This high-protein food is somewhat unique compared with other foods in its significant content of omega-3 fats.

Let’s stroll back to biology or chemistry class for a minute. “Omega-3” refers to the placement of the double bond in the long chain of carbon atoms that make up fats. “Omega” means “the end.” Omega-3 means the double bond in the carbon chain is third from the end of the chain.

You might see EPA, DHA or ALA on supplements or in some cases, on baby formula containers. We find EPA (eicosapentaenoic acid) and DHA (docosahexaenoic acid) naturally in fish and seafood. ALA (alpha-linolenic acid) refers to the omega-3 fats in plants.

Usually labels list the abbreviation instead of the tongue-twister scientific names, fortunately for us. You can impress your friends with these details.

Infant formula is supplemented with DHA because of its role in brain and eye development during infancy. Breast milk naturally contains this fatty acid, but the mom’s diet also determines the amount of DHA in the milk produced.

For adults, adequate amounts of omega-3 fats in our diet can help prevent heart disease.

In fact, research has shown that these powerful fats can reduce risk of blood clots and help prevent sudden cardiac death among those with abnormal heart rhythms. It also helps keep our arteries free from damaging plaque deposits. In some cases, more omega-3 fats may reduce your triglyceride levels.

Other researchers have shown that eating more foods high in omega-3 fats may increase our HDL “good” cholesterol levels and even lower our blood pressure.

However, don’t throw out any heart-related prescriptions you might be taking. Talk with your healthcare provider or dietitian about changes in your diet. If you are thinking about a fish oil supplement, visit with your healthcare provider about safe amounts before you begin.

Pregnant or nursing women also should visit with their healthcare provider about fish and seafood consumption. They should avoid eating swordfish, tilefish and king mackerel due to higher levels of mercury. However, canned fish and smaller fish are healthful options.

Some of the best sources of omega-3 fats are mackerel, salmon (especially wild caught), oysters, herring, sardines, lake trout, tuna (albacore), freshwater white fish, halibut and striped bass.

Get a little creative with fish choices. Try fish tacos, grilled or baked fish on a salad or salmon patties. Yes, the Midwestern staple, “Tuna Noodle Hotdish” counts.

Have a tuna salad sandwich for lunch. Maybe you like sardines or herring. Yes, these foods count toward the recommendation too. Enjoy them with whole-grain crackers for a snack.

What if you do not like fish or seafood or cannot eat them because you have allergies? Some plant foods also provide omega-3 fats. Chia seeds, Brussels sprouts, hemp seeds, walnuts and flaxseeds all provide omega-3 fats.

Foods such as eggs may contain omega-3s depending on the chicken’s feed. Grass-fed animals produce milk and meat higher in omega-3 fats.

Bottom line, enjoy a wide range of foods from all the food groups, and consider adding some fish, seafood or other sources of omega-3 fats to your diet.

nutrition analysis is courtesy of the Iowa State University’s Spend Smart. Eat Smart. program. Baking instead of deep frying reduces calories and fat.

Baked Fish and Chips
 Chip ingredients:
 4 cups potatoes (4 medium, unpeeled)

1 tablespoon oil (canola or vegetable)
 1/8 teaspoon salt
 1/8 teaspoon ground black pepper

Fish ingredients:
 4 fish fillets, thawed (salmon or other fish, about 3 oz. each)
 3 cups cornflakes
 1 egg
 2 tablespoons water
 1/3 cup flour

Note that the potatoes take longer to cook, so prepare potatoes/chips first. While potatoes are baking, prepare fish.

Chip directions: Preheat oven to 425 F. Scrub potatoes under running water using a clean vegetable brush. Cut in half and then into 1/4-inch slices. Combine potatoes, oil, salt and pepper in a bowl. Stir so potatoes are coated with oil. Spray a cookie sheet with cooking spray and lay slices out in a single layer. Bake for 15 minutes. Turn potatoes over and bake for 15 minutes more (for a total of 30 minutes)

Fish directions: Cut each fillet into two strips. Place cornflakes in a plastic zip-close bag. Crush by rolling a glass, can or rolling pin over the bag. Beat egg and water together in a bowl. Spray a cookie sheet with cooking oil spray. Put flour in a dish. Dip each strip into flour, then egg mixture, then cornflakes. Place fish on the sheet and bake in oven for 15 minutes until fish reaches an internal temperature of 145 F or flakes easily with a fork.

Makes four servings. Each serving (two fish strips and one cup potatoes) has 410 calories, 7 grams (g) fat, 26 g protein, 63 g carbohydrate, 6 g fiber and 300 milligrams sodium.

Home Not-So-Sweet Home

DAKOTA DATEBOOK

Dakota Datebook written by Tessa Sandstrom

November 22, 2021 — "Home sweet home" was not a term used to describe some of North Dakota's newest homeowners today in 1921. These prospective homeowners were to have modern, affordable homes built for them by the Home Building Association. The Association's laws said city homes were to cost no more than $5,000, but homeowners soon found that the Association had exceedingly underestimated this cost. In fact, on average, many of the homes cost 61 percent more than the estimated cost.

Among the unhappy homeowners was the NPL Commissioner of Agriculture and Industrial Commission member, John Hagan. After Hagan's house was completed and he had moved in, Hagan found the house cost nearly $2,000 more than estimated. Like others who were outraged by the high cost of the houses, Hagan refused to pay the extra amount and moved out.

At this time the Home Building Association was just beginning their work, but its work would also soon be over. Officially established in 1919 by the Non-Partisan League, the Association was just one of the programs initiated under the Industrial Commission. The program intended to build 700 homes for farmers and working men, but poor planning, and even worse political actions, led to the end of the Association. In fact, during its short existence, the actual work of building homes both began and ended under the same administration, and the Association's failure would become one of the factors in the decline of the NPL.

Several factors contributed to the Association's failure, but among the most important was the poor planning of the Association. No contracts were drawn up for the 54 homes that were completed by the Association, but instead, the houses were built only on verbal agreements. Furthermore, the Association failed to keep track of the expenses, material and labor used, and the cost of each building during construction. This led to the inflated prices of the homes, and the refusal by homeowners to pay for them. Many of the cases were taken to court, and the homeowners were able to obtain them for little over the estimated cost. This resulted in a $320,000 loss for the Association.

The poor planning, however, was just part of the problem. An investigation conducted in December 1921 found that the Association and the Non-Partisan League were conducting business in violation of state statutes. Many of the homes had been built for government officials, which violated a statute that forbade officials helping themselves to public money or property. This was especially controversial since the houses were intended for more disadvantaged people. The Investigation Committee of 1921 said, "The League bosses pretended to enact this law for the poor working man who had no home. The story of the Home Builders Association shows that it was only political bait."

Moreover, the Association borrowed money from another Industrial Commission program, the Bank of North Dakota. This activity was not allowed by law, and the action resulted in added debt for taxpayers. The Association had accrued a debt of over a half a million dollars by the time its laws were repealed and the Association liquidated in 1923. The Association did last two years longer than many responsible for its creation. Governor Frazier, Attorney General Lemke, and Commissioner Hagen were recalled from office over the controversy in a special election in 1921.

Houseplant Fungus Gnat Woes

DAKOTA GARDENER

By Joe Zeleznik, Forester
NDSU Extension

I'm in my early 50s. To my three-year-old grandson, that's really old. But to my mom, who's in her 80s, I'm still a kid. She has 14 grandkids and 11 great-grandkids, but I'm still her baby.

When my dad turned 60, he got a T-shirt that read "60 isn't old...if you're a tree!" It was a fun, teasing gift from a good friend.

My thoughts have often gone back to that T-shirt over the years. Is a 60-year-old tree young? For some tree species, yes. For other tree species, even a 30-year-old tree is an old-timer, especially in a tough climate like North Dakota.

Last week, I received a question from a colleague who read that the maximum lifespan of green ash trees in the Badlands was 100 years. Did I agree with that statement?

The short answer was no, I didn't agree. I've cored dozens of green ash trees in the Badlands, and two of them were more than 100 years old. One tree was more than 125 years old when I took a core in 2010. The other tree was more than 138 years old back in 2018. Both trees were very healthy.

In other parts of North Dakota, I've found a number of green ash trees that were in their 160s and 170s. The oldest one I've found was 185 years old. That tree was harvested for timber in 2007.

So, how old is old? What's the maximum age that a green ash tree will live to? The only way we can know for sure is to wait until trees die from natural causes, and then count the rings. That doesn't happen too often. I wonder how long that 185-year-old tree would have lived if it hadn't been harvested.

Though the Badlands provide a harsh environment, so do our cities. I doubt that a green ash tree would survive to 185 years along an urban street. In 'tree-planting pits,' those small enclosed areas with limited soil volume, trees are often doomed to a very short life. One report estimated that trees in these situations live an average of only seven years. That's short, especially when we consider the amount of time and money spent on planting and maintaining trees in our downtown areas.

But it's not all doom and gloom.

Ponderosa pines are native to southwestern North Dakota, on the edge of the Badlands. Some trees in this area have lived for more than 500 years. Two trees killed by a wildfire in 2004 dated back to the 1670s. They were over 430 years old when they died. Amazing!

Back in 2014, researchers found a 383-year-old cottonwood along the Little Missouri River. Most people don't think of cottonwood as a long-lived species, because they grow so fast. However, the research has clearly shown that cottonwoods can live several hundred years.

Another long-lived tree species is bur oak. The majority of the 'old' bur oak trees in North Dakota date back to settlement times. People needed building material and fuel, and the small forests took quite a hit as more and more people arrived. Very few trees were spared, though we occasionally find an oak tree that dates to the 1840s, 1820s or even into the 1700s. But those are rare. The oldest bur oak we ever found dated to the 1550s. It was over 450 years old when it came down. Wow!

So, is a 60-year-old tree considered to be 'old'? Like most things, it depends. A lot of tree species can live long lives, even in the midst of a broader prairie environment.

In my early 50s, I still feel like a kid. I won't live as long as those ash, oak or cottonwood trees, but I've got many years left in me. Unless someone harvests me for firewood.

HAT TIPS

Coondog

BY DEAN MEYER

Hello,
If you grew up with rodeo as your favorite sport, this is the week! The National Finals is on every night at 8. Now, for me, 8 is pretty late. But thanks to modern technology, I can watch it early in the morning. And I have lots of friends enjoying the show in Vegas.

And last night was really special. Because on another station they were celebrating

Frank Sinatra! How can you beat that? I suppose that does kind of age me. But dang it was good watching and listening.

A funny thing happened to me this week. I was visiting some friends in a nursing home in Nebraska. It happened to be lunchtime, so most of the residents were seated in the dining room awaiting their meal. I guess in Nebraska, you don't get a lot of visitors wearing a silver belly cowboy hat.

A couple of elderly gentlemen mentioned my hat so I stopped by to visit with them. Now, I'm not real tall. But I suppose if you are chairbound for a few years, a guy over six feet wearing a cowboy hat looks pretty big. One of these old boys asked, "Just how tall are you?" I replied that I was about six-two, but gravity was starting to pull me down a little. The other gentleman replied that he had noticed, "As you get heavier, you also get a little shorter." Those of you that know me, probably have noticed that I am a bit heavy. Like about sixty or seventy pounds heavy. And I thank you for not mentioning it to me. As these two old boys discussed this phenomenon, one mentioned that he had gone to school with a guy that was six-two and weighed about 220. I just wish I weighed 220. Anyway this guy went on a diet. About five years later, he ran into this friend. The guy had gone from 220 to 170. And he had grown from six-two to six-eleven! Six foot eleven inches! Had lost fifty pounds and stretched out another nine inches! I was going to call bull--- on that, but I am too kind.

Carm sent me a note last night. They were visiting about tagging calves. They have a neighbor nicknamed Coondog. You people in Harding County are aware of this guy. Last spring, Coondog was tagging a calf. And the mama cow didn't take kindly to this. The calf was belling and mama was bound and determined that Coondog was torturing this calf. She got the best of Coondog and ran him off.

Well, Coondog decided he'd go grab a shovel and educate this cow. He's kind of a cow whisperer. He said he took this long handled shovel out to whack this cow over the head.

When he came to, the cow, calf, and shovel were gone. And so was one of his boots!

Later, Dean

APPLE CRANBERRY BAKED BRIE

By Sugar and Soul

Ingredients

Cheese:

- 1 8-ounce wheel Brie cheese
- 1 tablespoon light brown sugar

Compote:

- 2/3 cup apple juice or cider
- 2 tablespoons light corn syrup
- 1 tablespoon light brown sugar
- 4 tablespoons unsalted butter divided
- 1 red delicious apple peeled, cored, and finely diced
- 2/3 cup whole cranberries fresh or frozen
- 4 tablespoons granulated sugar
- 1 tablespoon pecan pieces (optional)
- 2 tablespoons maple syrup (optional)

Directions

Cheese: Preheat oven to 350°F. Lightly grease a 5-inch cast-iron skillet, or line a small baking sheet with parchment paper and set aside.

Slice the top rind off the wheel of Brie, leaving rind on the bottom and sides. Place the Brie bottom side down in the skillet or on the pan and sprinkle with 1 tablespoon of light brown sugar.

Bake for 12-15 minutes until cheese is bubbly and soft.

Compote: Meanwhile, begin making the compote by whisking together the apple juice or cider, corn syrup, and 1 tablespoon light brown sugar in a small saucepan. Boil over high heat until reduced in half, about 5 to 7 minutes.

Add in 2 tablespoons of butter and stir until melted, then remove from heat.

Melt the other 2 tablespoons of butter in a large skillet over medium heat. Add the apple pieces and cook for 2 minutes, coat them with the butter and stirring occasionally.

Add in the cranberries and sugar and stir frequently until cranberries begin to pop, about 2 minutes.

Stir in the apple juice mixture and boil until reduced to a syrup consistency. Use the back of the spatula to squish the cranberries.

Spoon compote over the baked Brie and sprinkle with nuts and drizzle with maple syrup just before serving. Serve with toasted baguette slices or crackers.

Directions

In a stock pot whisk pumpkin, sweetened condensed milk, regular milk, vanilla, and pumpkin pie spice until smooth. Heat over medium heat until simmering, being careful not to boil.
