HAT TIPS

Festus

BY DEAN MEYER

Hello, As I mentioned before, I do use social media. I enjoy keeping up with a lot of people on Facebook. I can see my kin barrel racing, or just riding horse. I can follow the Tooke bucking horses and I can read rodeo stories posted by former champion (And still a champion to me) Larry Mahan. I can see who is celebrating a birthday and who is sitting on a beach in Mexico while I am getting ready to feed cattle when it is twenty-five below with a brisk wind. Oh, there are some people that upset me, but unlike real life, you just unfriend them so you don't have to start your day with a bad taste in your mouth. The news is usually enough to give me that.

But this morning a friend posted a video of Ken Curtis singing "Tumbling Tumbleweed." It brought a smile to my face and I just had to share it. I'd forgotten how talented that man was.

Now, I suppose a vast majority of the people don't know who Ken Curtis was. Because they just don't make good TV shows anymore. But he was Festus on "Gunsmoke." He was an old broke down cowboy with a hitch in his git-along. He rode a mule and drank beer. And he was always arguing with "Doc."

In one of my favorite scenes, Festus is going to buy a beer. And Doc is explaining to him that he should save some money and buy a lot. Festus asks, "A lot of what?" And Doc explains a "lot of land." Well Festus doesn't have enough money to buy a lot of land, so Doc says, "Just buy a little lot."

I won't go into detail, but he ends up just buying a beer.

Which reminds me of how sometimes what you say and what you mean are entirely two different things.

Like sorting cows down an alley. Sometimes it is simple. In or by. In or out. Keep or sell. Steer or heifer. Open or bred. It's kind of like plans drawn on a bar napkin. It looks good on paper but in reality it's not that good. Because often more than one will get by you. And it's "In with the brockle and by with the short tailed cow." Or, "Catch the middle cow and let the others by!" Shirley loves that one.

And as I was listening to Festus sing, I thought of one time many years ago. The semi was backed up against the loading chute and had kind of froze down. The brakes on the trailer wouldn't release and being a genius, I figured I would just have Shirley hook onto it with the pickup and give it a swift jerk to free things up. I know, I know, it wasn't a good idea.

I backed that pickup, loaded with a couple ton of cow cake, up against that truck and hooked a towrope on. I advised my able assistant that when I gave her the signal, she was going to have to hit it "pretty hard." Now "pretty hard" and "signal" are the key words here.

I had just stepped up on the side of the truck and was opening the door and I hollered at the dog to get back. Shirley thought that was the signal and she popped the clutch and "hit it hard!" And I mean hard. Really hard. That big old towrope stretched until it was the size of a rubber band. I was, like in grade school, "ducking and covering." But thank God the rope held, the truck held, and everyone ended up safe and sound.

And to tell the truth, I have no idea what this has to do with Festus.

Later, Dean

Save Money, Avoid Food Waste by Using Food You Have on Hand

PRAIRIE FARE

"Mom, I need to eat more vegetables," my daughter said as we pushed a cart around a grocery store.

I did not think those words would ever come out of my daughter's mouth.

"Pick out whatever vegetables you want," I replied happily.

I was footing the grocery bill for my young adult. She had reminded me that I often took her older brother on grocery shopping missions during his early months of living on his own.

As we walked, she quizzed me about the attributes of various foods, even though I was "off duty" as a nutrition specialist.

"I have some meat in my fridge to use soon. I'd like some peppers. Which are the healthiest peppers?" she asked.

"Red peppers are highest in vitamin C, but green, red, yellow and orange peppers all are good for you," I said. "They're on special for $1 each, so how about one of each color?"

"These would be good in stir-fries or fajitas," I added. Next, she picked up a red cabbage.

I began to wonder if my real daughter had been abducted by space aliens. Who was this person, anyway?

She picked up a larger cabbage after reading the price. In small print, the 99-cent price was per pound.

"You might want to get the smaller cabbage, unless you have lots of plans for cabbage," I said.

"I'm figuring out what to do with the food I have on hand. I don't want to throw it away," she said.

"You really should try a free app I downloaded," she added. "You enter the ingredients you have on hand, and then it finds you recipes."

Now, the "child" was teaching the mother.

I use various mobile applications, or "apps," on my smart phone, but I had never used an app to inform me what to cook. I just look at what I have and invent a recipe.

If you have an iPhone, Android or iPad, you might want to explore some of the many free food apps. However, remember that many online recipes are accompanied with advertisements to entice you to buy specific brands of ingredients.

If you click on an ad, you may leave a digital footprint. The ads may follow you to social media. You may not realize why you feel the need for the advertised product.

As examples, "SuperCook" (my daughter's favorite) allows you to upload your existing ingredients. "AllRecipes Dinner Spinner" provides inspiration for meals with its 50,000 recipes, while "Epicurious" allows you to explore 35,000 recipes. Further, MyPlate has a free app to help you plan a healthier diet.

Be sure to read the small print before you download apps. The apps may track your contact information and other ways to identify you.

The sheer volume of online recipe options can be overwhelming. Like most people, I only make one main dish at a time. Not all recipes are healthful and some require cheflike skills or at least, a lot of experience in the kitchen.

Actually, I kind of like "old school" printed cookbooks.

Hungry for new recipes? I have an opportunity for you. Please enter the drawing for a free 2022 calendar. Go to <https://forms.gle/CGBg79caYa8GzwpJ8> and fill out this online form to enter. If the link doesn't work, email me at julie.garden-robinson@ndsu.edu with a column idea and your full address.

Instead of a recipe, here's a creative exercise in using what you have on hand, which could include peppers and cabbage that my daughter took home. It is one of the many publications in a series of publications at NDSU Extension. See www.ag.ndsu.edu/food and click on "Pinchin' Pennies in the Kitchen" to learn how to use what you have.

7 Steps to Creating a Stir-fry
Choose a protein. For example, choose 1 pound of chicken, beef or pork cut in small, bite-sized pieces, OR one package of firm tofu cut into half-inch cubes. For uniform cooking, cut the protein into similar-sized pieces.

Marinate the protein in one of the following:

3 to 4 tablespoons soy sauce or teriyaki sauce, reduced-sodium

3 to 4 tablespoons chicken broth

3 to 4 tablespoons apple juice

Prepare produce.
1 onion, cut into wedges
1 to 2 cloves garlic, minced
2 cups fresh vegetables, such as shredded carrots, shredded cabbage, sliced mushrooms,

Fruit for Thought

DAKOTA GARDENER

This summer I picked sour cherries at a fellow gardener's home. I had not picked sour cherries before and this year was a bumper crop. I wanted two ice cream pails and left with five! The cherries were a bit sour for my taste buds, but once those tart fruits were pitted and turned into jam, they were a culinary delight.

Sour cherries add beauty and color to the landscape with flowers in the spring and interesting bark and fruits in the summer and fall. The breeding of Dwarf Sour cherries began in the late 1940s by Les Kerr at the University of Saskatchewan.

Sour cherries are self-fruitful and do not need another variety nearby to produce fruit. They need direct sunlight for at least half the day, but more sunlight is always better.

It is recommended to plant the shrubs a few inches deeper than they were in the original container. The extra buds at the soil surface serve as a safety net incase something happens to the upper part of the plant. Deer and rabbit damage is an example. Older stems or trunks also can be victim to winter kill, which is irreversible damage due to winter conditions.

Sour cherries prefer well-drained soils and will need irrigation the first few years of their establishment. After that, plants are able to withstand drier conditions. Be sure to keep competing grass and weeds away from the shrubs when they are young. Mulch can be used to help reduce weed competition and help conserve soil moisture.

These shrubs don't need fertilizer, but if you choose to add fertilizer, do so in the early spring as growth is emerging.

Sour cherries can grow six feet tall or more, so be sure to read the plant information carefully. The shrubs need their space for suckers to form multiple stems or trunks. Shrubs will produce cherries once they are 4 or 5 years old.

Do not harvest the cherries when they first turn red. The cherries need time to mature and develop a sweeter flavor. Instead, wait to harvest the cherries when they have reached a deep rich color. Mature cherries will not fall from the branches. Depending on growing conditions and cultivars, shrubs can yield 25 to 30 pounds or more of fruit.

Recommended cultivars for eating are Carmine Jewel, Romeo, Valentine, Crimson Passion, Juliet and Cupid. Carmine Jewel and Valentine are great for processing while Juliet is best for fresh eating.

For more information on sour cherries, visit the University of Saskatchewan Fruit Program website at <https://research-groups.usask.ca/fruit/Fruit%20crops/sour-cherries.php>

Needless to say, these beautiful and flavorful tart treats made my planting list for the upcoming year. Now, I just need to find the space.

Happy gardening!

sliced celery, sliced peppers, broccoli, zucchini or yellow squash, or substitute frozen stir-fry vegetables

Make a sauce and a glaze.

Sauce: 1/4 cup chicken broth, 1/4 cup soy sauce, 1 to 2 teaspoons sugar, 2 to 4 teaspoons vinegar

Glaze: 2 teaspoons cornstarch plus 2 tablespoons water or chicken broth

Cook the protein.

Turn skillet on high, add 1 tablespoon oil and half of the protein. Stir-fry until fully cooked, about two to three minutes. Transfer to bowl and cover. Stir-fry the remaining protein.

Cook the vegetables.

Add 2 tablespoons oil. Stir-fry onion until tender, add garlic and then remaining vegetables. Cook the vegetables to the desired tenderness.

Combine the ingredients.

Return the meat to the pan with the veggies. Add sauce and stir gently until everything is coated evenly.

Stir in "glaze" and stir-fry until the sauce in the pan is glossy and thickened.

Serve immediately over rice or noodles.
