Helping our Dears with Fears

BY JACEY WANNER

NDSU EXTENSION OFFICE PARENT FAMILY EDUCATOR

We were walking into the zoo last weekend, excited to go see the new "penguins." The penguins are a hot topic in my house, especially for my almost 2-year-old who sometimes wakes up in the middle of the night to say, "Mommy, penguins."

So to say we were excited is an understatement. We walk into the Dakota Zoo and my 2-year-old freezes and crouches into a ball freezing and exclaiming, "scared." I am completely puzzled as I haven't seen her do this before, so I walk over to her and she slowly looks up at me and says, "Mommy, scared, hold me." I look at her and promptly grab her hand and start leading her into the sea of people, letting her know this is the zoo she talks to me about in the middle of the night, that this is what we have been excited for. She resists and tries to crouch into a ball and again exclaims, "scared!"

OK, parenting check point. Here is a snapshot of my parenting thoughts. What emotion is my child experiencing? Duh, she is telling me she is scared. How am I supporting her fear? I am not. I am letting my own excitement for the zoo bulldoze her fear. She doesn't know how to go to the zoo. There are lots of people and animals that I am excited about, but she is obviously overwhelmed.

Now, back to getting my curled up 2-year-old out of a ball and into the zoo. This situation could have two extremes. I could say, "She is too scared to do this, let's just go home." Or I could keep doing what I started and let her know there isn't anything to be scared of and to hurry up because we want to go see those penguins.

When our kids are scared, it is important to let them know that it is okay to be scared of something, even if we think it is silly. What they are feeling is real, and emotional health starts with acknowledgement. Our kids look to us to handle situations that make them uncomfortable so when we are able to slow down and meet them where they are, they realize they can look to us when this feeling comes up again because we supported them when they were scared before.

At the zoo with my daughter, this looked like me slowing down and saying, "Oh, you're scared, Mommy is going to be right here holding your hand. Should we go find those penguins, or do you want to stay here for a little bit longer until you're ready?"

My daughter was ready and took a few more steps into the zoo. We took it at a slower pace and talked about the animals she was seeing in real life for the first time she could remember.

She did her "scared freeze" again at the lizards, and to be honest I wanted to do that too. She looked for my hand this time because she knew that this helped when she felt this way before.

When we find something that helps our kids, we know it because they usually ask for it again, whether that be a saying, a hand hold, a silly face or a back scratch.

We can also ask our kids what could help them, "I see you're scared. How can I help you?"

Another important thing we can say to our kids is, "When we are scared, we have a chance to be brave. How can I help you be brave? Because sometimes when we are brave, we get to do really fun things."

We made it to the penguins, and they were awesome and my daughter hasn't stopped talking about them since. I helped her be brave.

SWEDISH MEATBALL PASTA BAKE

By Tina's Chic Corner

Ingredients

Meatballs:

- 1 and 1/4 cups plain panko bread crumbs
- 4 tablespoons butter
- 2/3 cup yellow onion, finely chopped
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 1/2 teaspoon pepper
- 1/2 teaspoon ground allspice
- 1/4 teaspoon nutmeg
- 3 cloves of garlic, minced
- 2/3 cup milk
- 2 eggs
- 1 pound ground beef (I used 85/15.)
- 1 pound ground pork
- 3 tablespoons oil
- 2 cups shell pasta

Sauce:

- 6 tablespoons butter
- 1/4 cup plus 3 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 4 cups beef broth (I used low sodium, equivalent to a 32 ounce box.)
- 1/2 cup water
- 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
- 3 tablespoons fresh parsley, finely chopped
- 1/2 cup heavy cream
- 1 tablespoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon black pepper

Directions

Preheat the oven to 375 degrees F.

Meatballs: Add the panko bread crumbs to a large bowl and set aside.

In a skillet over medium heat, melt the butter. Add the finely chopped onion, salt, pepper, allspice, and nutmeg and cook for about 5 minutes. Stir often. Add the minced garlic and cook for another 2 minutes.

Turn the heat down to low/medium, and add the milk. Stir everything together and bring it to a simmer.

Once the onion mixture has come to a simmer, pour it from the pan into the bowl of panko bread crumbs and stir everything together. The mixture will be very thick. Set this bowl aside to cool. In a separate extra large bowl, add the eggs and beat them.

Then add the ground beef, ground pork, and cooled onion mixture. Mix everything together. Form about 30 balls and then chill them in the refrigerator for 30 minutes.

Once the meatballs are done chilling, in a large skillet over medium heat, heat up the oil.

Add the meatballs to the skillet in batches and cook them until they are browned on all sides, about 15 minutes. Batches made it so the pan wasn't over crowded which made flipping them and seeing when they were done easier. Transfer the meatballs to a dish and set them aside.

Pasta: Cook the pasta al dente according to the directions on the box, drain it and add it to a 9 x 13 oven safe baking dish.

Sauce and Assembly: Place the meatballs into the baking dish, nestling them into the pasta. In a large skillet on medium heat, melt the butter.

Add the flour, stirring constantly, for about 2 minutes.

Stir in the beef broth, water, Worcestershire, salt and pepper and bring it to a simmer. Stir often.

Reduce the heat to low/medium, and add the parsley and heavy cream. Stir everything together constantly and cook it until it thickens, about 10 minutes.

Pour the sauce over the meatballs and pasta.

Bake the Swedish meatballs, pasta, and sauce in the preheated oven for 30 minutes.

DAKOTA RECREATION REPORT

BY PATRICIA STOCKDILL
OUTDOOR NOTES

Outdoor Notes:
*People are asked to report any dead birds and abnormal behavior in migrating birds, especially waterfowl, shorebirds, and raptors, to the N.D. Game and Fish Dept. on their wildlife mortality reporting form, (gf.nd.gov/wildlife/diseases/mortality-report), due to a national outbreak of highly contagious avian influenza. It can also impact domestic poultry. While rarely infectious to humans, hunters or anyone handling poultry should use precautions, such as avoiding handling sick animals, wear gloves when dressing birds, wash hands and equipment thoroughly, and cook meat to an internal temperature of 165 degrees.

*April 24: Crow season ends.

*April 26: N.D. Game & Fish Dept. public advisory meeting, Game & Fish headquarters, Bismarck, 100 N. Bismarck Expressway, 7 p.m.

*May 1: Paddlefish season opens. See N.D. Game & Fish Dept. regulations for open areas and other details.

Fishing:

Lake Sakakawea elevation, April 18: 1,827.58 feet above mean sea level; 14,400 cubic feet per second (CFS) Garrison Dam average daily releases.

Missouri River gauge height, Stanton: 6.73 feet.

Missouri River gauge height, Washburn: 10.85 feet.

*Lakes Audubon & Sakakawea, Cenex Bait & Tackle, Lakes Audubon & Sakakawea: No activity with limited access on the east end of Lake Sakakawea.

*Lakes Audubon & Sakakawea, Hwy. 83 Lawn & Leisure, Lakes Audubon & Sakakawea: Access points to many bays on the east end of Lake Sakakawea filled in with the Easter storm.

*Lake Sakakawea, New

Town: Van Hook Arm ramp accessible but has a mix of dry and icy spots at times. The Arm itself could also have ice.

*Missouri River, Dakota Tackle, Bismarck: No new reports with the Easter storm shutting down activity.

*Missouri River, Enerbase of Washburn: No new reports.

*Missouri River System, Scott's Bait & Tackle, Pick City: Access to the Missouri River tailrace and south side of Lake Sakakawea limited after the Easter storm with muddy shoreline conditions.

*McLean Co. area lakes, Cenex of Wilton: Limited access to area lakes after the Easter storm with no reports from the Missouri River or area lakes.

OUR OUTDOORS

It's Terminal

BY NICK SIMONSON
DAKOTA EDGE OUTDOORS

In the process of fishing, I've seen a good deal and done a lot of it. I've read a ton, watched some more, and through trial and error learned quite a bit, but most days it feels like it's never enough. Through trial-and-error with new ideas, patterns, and processes, I trade frustration for elation and vice versa on a variety of streams and lakes for the seemingly unlimited species available.

Perhaps the greatest leap in all of that learning which any angler makes is gaining the understanding of how and when to utilize terminal tackle. I can recall the days as a youngster of hooking a jig into a 12-inch steel leader, with the hope or the fear that a pike might bite me off. When I encounter the same set-up from time to time used by others, I can often tell they are in that same point of their angling journey.

Whether it's a direct connection to a jig, fly or plain hook via a palomar knot, utilizing a swivel to reduce line twist on an in-line spinner or crawler harness behind a bottom bouncer, or even occasionally slapping on a wire leader to prevent bite-offs from toothy pike, there is a time for all terminal tackle, and a time when none is the best option. Figuring out when is akin to the Great Filter in Fermi's Paradox, where certain casual fishermen willing to take the leap enter the ranks of those more devout anglers, leaving the world of what they didn't know about their line additions behind them.

Direct Connect

Not every fish is toothy. Not every species takes to a trolled spoon. In fact, the most effective lure for just about any type of fish is some sort of jig in some configuration. Walleyes, crappies, smallmouth and largemouth bass and most trout are top-tier targets for jigs. Jigs should be tied directly to the line, utilizing a palomar knot, improved clinch knot, or similar strong option. There should never be a swivel with a snap nor a stretch of wire leader for these lures. For these fish, which in one degree or another require some sensitivity and a direct connection to the action below for an ideal presentation, a jig tied directly to the line is the best way to go.

Looking Snappy

Quick-change snaps, clips, and clasps — whether on their own or with a swivel attachment — allow for a rapid exchange of lures to find a pattern that works. Whether trolling crankbaits on a favorite stretch of gravelly lake bottom for summer walleyes or in other situations where fish aren't going to get a good look at the intricacies of an offering, a quick-change clasp can make things easier, and in some cases accent the action of a lure. The open loop of a quick-change lure clip gives crankbaits a bit more wobble than a direct tie and allows for faster substitutions than tying a Rapala knot, cutting and retying again. Additionally, smaller no-knot snaps and clips that connect directly to the end of a line can aid anglers with aging eyes in changing smaller options out — including flies and tinier jigs — while still not having as much of a presence for fish to notice.

Take a Turn

Swivels have their place in an assortment of terminal tackle as well and are primarily used to prevent line twist. If you've ever unhooked a walleye from a spinner rig trolled behind a bottom bouncer with a bum swivel, you know how important they can be. When that line recoils into twists and loops, it's evident that a swivel isn't doing its job, or one needs to be added to reduce the spinner blade's effects. In those situations where active, bladed or spinning lures will be applying excessive torque to a line, having a selection of swivels to tie into the presentation will help keep everything straight and functioning properly. Against any weight — be it a flattened teardrop on a sturgeon rig, a pyramid on a catfish setup, or a walking sinker on a Lindy rig for walleyes — a swivel can also serve as the bumper between the main line and the business end of the presentation.

Lead On

Finally, the use of a steel leader, as suggested above, should be employed in limited circumstances, where the odds of a bite off by pike, muskies or other toothy critters is a confirmed hazard for that particular fishing outing. For those other more wary and less toothy species, they serve only as a distraction which discourages bites, from the highly visible wire to the large snaps and swivels they employ. Again, they're great for pike, but not much else. In the enigma that is the art of angling, all generalizations are wrong, including this one. But knowing when and where to tweak how things look at the end of the line, be it with the addition of a piece of terminal tackle or the removal of it, will help bring a better understanding of the process. Through those lessons learned, it's easier to make the jump and end up with more success in any open water situation one might encounter this season ... in our outdoors.

Stories you may have missed in last week's BHG newspapers

'Natural decrease' not seen in McLean County

McLean County was among a handful of counties in North Dakota to see a natural decrease in their population between 2020 and 2021.

According to a report issued by the U.S. Census Bureau late last month, more than 73 percent of U.S. counties experienced a natural decrease in 2021. Natural decrease, the report stated, occurs when there are more deaths than births in a population over a given time period.

In 2021, fewer births, an aging population and increased mortality — intensified by the COVID-19 pandemic — contributed to a rise in natural decrease, the report noted. In addition to this, migration was also responsible for population changes, both positive and negative.

Discovery Wind Project looks for landowners

Apex Clean Energy has leased nearly 11,000 acres needed for the Discovery Wind Project. An additional 29,000 acres are needed to reach the project's goal of 40,000 acres.

Although initial plans for the Discovery Wind Project called for 80 to 120 turbines, recent revisions in scope have reduced that number to around 70 turbines because the company plans to use larger turbines than originally proposed.

"We plan to have about 70 turbines now because the new turbines will be slightly bigger and more efficient," Bill Pedersen, Senior Development Manager of Apex, said. "So far, we have about 30 landowners committed to the lease, but we need to wrap up acreage by the end of 2022."

School board applauds latest renovation design

Ongoing discussions about the grand scale renovation of Washburn's 7th Street school building took a positive turn last Monday based on the lead architect's latest rendering, which checks a lot of boxes for local school board members.

After meeting with architect Trevor Huffaker during a 6 p.m. facilities committee meeting, Luke Retterath — the committee chair — presented changes to the Option D1 drawing to his fellow board members at the 7 p.m. regular meeting.

The updated plans include a cafeteria commons area in the current science section, along with a locker commons area for grades 9-12 comprising 116 storage units.

Keeping the calves warm

With forecasts calling for up to 30 inches of snow, Central North Dakota ranchers have been busy this week working to avoid losing livestock in the storm.

Kordell Stiefel, who ranches southwest of Zap, said he and his family spent 12 to 14 hours Sunday preparing for the anticipated blizzard, set to arrive Tuesday.

"All day yesterday," Stiefel said Monday.

Stiefel and his family, with help from neighbor Deen Johnson, spent the days ahead of Tuesday's snow relocating cattle and preparing fields for the storm.

"We've been moving cattle closer to the barn ... putting up windbreaks, putting out straw," Stiefel said. "Doing what we can to keep them out of the wind and keep 'em dry."

Commission moves on wind ordinance

After many months of discussion and debate, and the looming expiration of a moratorium on wind energy development in the county, the Mercer County Commission narrowly approved moving forward on a wind ordinance.

This decision was a return to the status of the ordinance in July 2021, when the commission considered a draft ordinance proposed by the Mercer County Planning and Zoning Board. Inaction and disagreement among the commissioners at that time led to this proposal being set aside, as a committee was set up to consider changes that might resolve disagreements, alleviate concerns and lead to some kind of consensus.

A final recommendation from this committee was still pending at the commission's meeting last week Wednesday. Commissioner Liza Taylor, who represents the commission on the committee, said the different members and entities associated with the committee were requesting a delay on commission action, as well as a public hearing to consider the suggestions that the different entities had raised.
