DAKOTA RECREATION REPORT

BY PATRICIA STOCKDILL

Outdoor Notes:

•Reminder that it's illegal to chase, harass, or pursue any wildlife species with motorized vehicle.

•Ice is never completely safe. Avoid areas with vegetation, moving water, pressure ridges, and springs. Check conditions as you go along on the ice and don't move around at night.

•Jan. 14: Bottoms Up Delta Waterfowl chapter banquet, Wilton.

Fishing:

Lake Sakakawea elevation, Jan. 9: 1,829.79 feet above mean sea level; 23,100 cubic feet per second (CFS) Garrison Dam average daily releases.

Missouri River gauge height, Stanton: River stage, 11.53 feet.

Missouri River gauge height, Washburn: River stage, 13.75 feet.

•N.D. Game & Fish Dept. game wardens: No reports from the Missouri River System.

•Lakes Audubon & Sakakawea, Cenex Bait & Tackle, Lakes Audubon & Sakakawea: Lake Audubon spotty for walleye with access off East Totten boat ramp. Moving on the lake is difficult unless on a trail, especially along the south shore, without tracked vehicles. Try Centennial or Douglas bays for walleye on the east end of Lake Sakakawea but moving around also difficult.

•Lakes Audubon & Sakakawea, Hwy. 83 Lawn & Leisure, Lakes Audubon & Sakakawea: Some activity on the east end of Lake Sakakawea off Centennial Bay. No reports on success, however, and use caution with hard snowdrifts on the ice. Moving around on Lake Audubon difficult without tracked vehicles but anglers are accessing off East Totten boat ramp. Tracked vehicles also needed between Velva Point and Old Church Bay but look for some walleye success.

•Lake Sakakawea, New Town: A few anglers accessing off the Van Hook boat ramp but no reports on success. Anglers are going farther up river accessing off the south point of 4 Bears and fishing Sanish Bay for walleye.

•Missouri River, Dakota Tackle, Bismarck: Access limiting activity on many area lakes.

•Missouri River, Enerbase of Washburn: Lots of activity with some walleye success off Lake Audubon. Travels difficult without tracked vehicles unless on trails.

•Missouri River System, Scott's Bait & Tackle, Pick City: Little activity on the Missouri River tailrace. Wolf Creek on the south shore of Lake Sakakawea producing occasional walleye at night but use extreme caution with heavy snow on the ice.

•McLean Co. area lakes, Cenex of Wilton: Some activity on New Johns Lake and Lake Sakakawea but tracked vehicles recommended.

DAKOTA GARDENER

The Extension Master Gardener Program celebrates 50 years

BY ESTHER E. MCGINNIS,
Horticulturist, NDSU Extension

In 2016, a roomful of Extension Master Gardener coordinators from around the country sat with bated breath as the speaker took the stage.

Dr. David Gibby, a distinguished silver-haired gentleman, began to speak of his childhood in the Southwest during the 1930s. He shared a story about his parents that defined his upbringing and inspired a community volunteer program that would be adopted in 49 states.

Gibby's parents were traveling to an event and were dressed in their Sunday best. Before they could reach their destination, they were stranded by a flat tire in a remote location. A car full of teenagers stopped to help. While feeling apprehensive of strangers, the Gibbys accepted the offer.

The teens removed the damaged tire and said they needed to take the tire home to repair. An hour passed and the Gibbys assumed they had seen the last of the tire. Suddenly the teens reappeared and installed the repaired tire. Before the Gibbys could offer payment or thanks, the teens left. The Gibbys celebrated this act of kindness and encouraged their children to pay it forward.

Fast forward to the 1970s-- David Gibby and his colleague Bill Scheer were overworked Extension agents in Washington state. Inundated with home gardening questions from rapidly urbanizing areas, the two community-minded agents could not keep up with the burgeoning demand for information. After deliberating, Gibby and Scheer came up with the concept for the Extension Master Gardener Program.

They would recruit and train volunteers to answer gardening questions and serve the needs of their communities. Based on their time spent in Europe, they were familiar with the German tradition of bestowing titles on individuals that demonstrated proficiency in certain trades. They settled on Gartenmeister which is translated as Master Gardener.

After some initial obstacles from skeptical administrators, Gibby and Scheer recruited volunteers. Two hundred applicants were accepted into the program.

Washington State University developed a 40-hour course to train the new applicants that included sessions on ornamental plants, fruits, lawns, vegetables, plant diseases, insects, weeds and pesticides. At the end of training, the applicants took a final exam to demonstrate their proficiency. Upon completion of the course, Master Gardeners were expected to volunteer with the gardening public under the supervision of Extension.

The volunteer program was a success and has inspired programs in land-grant universities in 49 states and in Canada and South Korea. The Extension Master Gardener Program is celebrating its 50th anniversary in 2023.

The program has grown to over 86,000 volunteers in 49 states. In 2018, Master Gardeners volunteered over 5.6 million hours to benefit their communities and educated more than 8.6 million individuals. The pay it forward ethic of David Gibby is alive and well!

The North Dakota State University Extension Master Gardener Program was started in 1980 and currently has over 200 volunteers. In 2022, this generous group volunteered more than 12,500 hours in 37 North Dakota counties. Volunteers grew produce for food pantries, gave science-based gardening recommendations to the public and engaged in community beautification.

Helping Words

By Alan L. Hathaway
Garrison Church of God

What is God really like?

By this week most of our “resolutions” for 2023 have disappeared into the fog of past regrets. An upscale fitness center proclaimed it would not accept any Jan. 1 memberships because these patrons were not serious about their health. They probably had a point. As humans we often make decisions and promises on the spur of the moment rather than careful consideration.

The problem that we experience is not due to the nature of promises but the nature of ourselves. We are emotion driven creatures. We boldly affirm, “absolutely I will do this” then in the next breath “but maybe not.” When our decisions and commitments are driven by the emotion of the moment, we often make foolish promises or worse disastrous ones.

The real danger of such promises is that they are unrealistic and unconsidered. As a result, we easily justify their violation. But in the process, we compromise our integrity. The results are - we devalue the importance of commitments and we develop a jaundice view of other’s commitments. Or simply, we foster mistrust in our relationships.

The book of Proverbs takes this concept very seriously. It speaks often of the danger of unsecured commitments. Or, even worse, the danger of commitments made without careful consideration of consequences. The book of Proverbs reflects on the importance of commitments and promises in human relationships. These ultimately are the foundations of family, friendships, business transactions and government. When we are jaded about the faithfulness of others to keep their commitments, the fabric of all social interactions unravels (funny, we never question our own fidelity). As chaos sweeps into these relationships, we are less likely to commit to others and they, to us.

Marriage is one of these “promise” relationships. Is it any wonder as we become cynical about others keeping their commitments more of us are unwilling to make such a commitment. A long time ago (over 40 years), when the sociological impacts of this cavalier attitude toward commitment in American culture was just beginning to manifest, sociological and religious writers, like Louis B. Smedes, spoke of the “island of certainty” that promises create in culture. At the time, I had just started in ministry, though I understood the truth of the observation, I did not understand the implications. I was part of that rising generation now abandoning the sacredness of commitments and so I struggled to understand what this failure would do to our wider culture in the future.

Louis Smedes had been specifically addressing the institution of marriage and the island of certainty this commitment between a man and woman created for their children. Almost off-handedly, he mentioned how promises and commitments in the chaos of human relationships helped create secure places to build culture. We now see the consequences in the decision of many within our present generations to forgo the commitment of marriage. This reality is a symptom of the wider cynicism we have toward all commitments.

At the bottom of this struggle is the integrity of the individual. Commitments have no meaning without personal integrity and so they can easily be ignored. One of the central tenants of the Christian faith is personal integrity, or simply “keep your promises.”

“And do not take an oath by your head, for you cannot make one hair white or black. Let what you say be simply ‘Yes’ or ‘No’; anything more than this comes from evil.” - Jesus in Matthew 5:36-37

Strange stories

BY SARAH WALKER

It’s the fantastic that sells. In 1907 and 1908, Ward County newspapers reported on a mess of such tales—some tall, some so strange they must have happened.

In one story, as the Kenmare news reported on this day in 1908, a buffalo that had wandered down from Canada apparently had an identity crisis. The buffalo joined Kenmare man J. A. Englund’s cattle herd, and managed to go home with the herd.

Once there, after he was discovered, the buffalo picked a fight with Englund’s Red Poland bull. Englund and his foreman, Sanders, used pitchforks to try and separate the two animals, and finally they succeeded, after the buffalo also gored the bull to death. The buffalo then began to attack one of Englund’s mares, and ripped up his barn. He was forced to shoot the buffalo. Under normal circumstances, this would incur a penalty. This was not normal.

This wasn’t the only odd happening in that region. The Bismarck Tribune proclaimed its curiosity: “Strange things are coming out of the northern part of the state,” the paper stated, citing the case of the buffalo, as well as a “lad” who was attacked by “catamounts or mountain lions, or wild cats or roaring hippopotami or some other unusual animals.” This had been gruesomely reported earlier; young Walter Johnson, of McKinney, had gone to shoot a lynx. Instead, the lynx attacked the boy, disfigured him, and killed him.

The funeral was set... unbeknownst to Walter, the grieving family, and even the city of McKinney. The report wasn’t true.

The Tribune also reported that Ole Olson, from Blaisdell, walked into a pack of wolves, after mistaking them at first for dogs. He escaped not by brandishing a penknife at them and yelling for help as he did at first, but, as the report went, by playing his horn, which he apparently just happened to have with him.

The Tribune stated of the instrument, “We forget whether a trumpet or a trombone.” Whichever the case, the music did the trick—the wolves apparently had a taste for the finer arts. Finally, some people living nearby came and rescued Olson. He had been playing for a long time—so long, in fact, that he was exhausted and out of breath, and he needed help just climbing into the wagon. This story appeared under the headline, “Weird.” It certainly was.

As the Tribune said, “The typewriters of the veracious correspondents are clicking overtime with horrifying recitals.”

PRAIRIE DOC PERSPECTIVES

BY JILL KRUSE, DO

The other skin cancer

When people talk about skin cancer the type that most people think about is melanoma. This skin cancer follows the ABCDE rules for diagnosis. A – Asymmetry, B – irregular Border, C – more than 1 Color, D – Diameter more than 6 mm, and E – expanding in size. However, these rules will not help find the most common type of skin cancer called a basal cell carcinoma.

Unlike melanomas, basal cell carcinomas are often symmetric with regular borders in the early stages. They are usually one color, being the same as the surrounding skin, but with a pearlescent sheen, although they can also be reddish or bluish in color. On darker skin tones, they may appear lighter or darker than the overall skin tone. They often start off as bumps with a rolled border or can have a warty appearance. They are also fairly slow growing and can be smaller than 6 mm when forming. As you can see, the ABCDE rules are NOT helpful for diagnosing this type of skin cancer.

Basal cell carcinoma accounts for nearly 80% of all skin cancers and is the most common type of cancer in the world. However, they are rarely fatal, tend to grow slowly, and do not tend to spread to other areas of the body, although, if left untreated, may grow deep and spread out from where they started. They are commonly found on sun-exposed areas of skin – such as the neck, arms and face, especially on the nose and ears. Basal cell carcinomas are most common in elderly males, especially in fair skinned people with blonde or red hair. One example is farmers, who typically spend many hours out in the fields working in the sun. They often wear baseball hats which protect their foreheads and scalps but leave their neck, arms, nose and ears exposed to the sun where they are more likely to have a basal cell carcinoma occur. Another example would be truck drivers, they would most likely have a basal cell carcinoma on the left arm or the left side of their face versus the right due to that side more frequently being in the sun.

As a basal cell progresses, they can develop a central depression that often scabs and bleeds. Oftentimes there are thin red lines visible on the edges of a basal cell carcinoma. Those thin red lines are small blood vessels that can bleed when bumped or scratched. When someone comes to the doctor and describes having a sore that does not seem to heal, a basal cell carcinoma is often on the list of possible causes to rule out.

Do not just follow the ABCDE's for skin cancer detection. No matter what the spot on your skin looks like, if you are concerned, tell your doctor to take a look. It just could be one of the other types of skin cancer. Your skin will thank you.
