DAKOTA GARDENER

BY CARRIE KNUTSON, HORTICULTURE AGENT

Amazing apples

My son came home from school one day last month and emptied out three apple seeds from his jeans pocket. He saved them from his lunch. He asked to plant them so he could grow his own apples. Be still this gardener's heart!

However, I was in a pickle. I knew that the chances of the apple seeds growing, thriving and producing apples were slim. Why is growing an apple from seed challenging?

For starters, apple seeds need a period of cool, moist conditions, also called stratification, before they will germinate. Usually, seeds are placed in moist potting soil and then put in the fridge for 90 to 120 days.

Second, apples are cross-pollinated so the seed will not grow apples that are the same as the original tree. In order to get the same tree, you would have to take vegetative cuttings from the original tree.

That brings us to a third point, apple trees are commercially produced through grafting. A scion (top of the tree) is grafted on rootstock.

Rootstocks have a big impact on the way the scion grows, and there are many different types of rootstocks for apple tree growers to pick from. Some characteristics determined by the rootstock are cold hardiness, disease resistance, fruit quality, how long it takes the tree to fruit, and mature tree size. In addition, some rootstocks can improve the strength and growth potential of a less-robust scion.

How does this impact the apple seeds we are trying to grow? The seeds will not have the benefit of a hardy rootstock to support the tree as it grows.

Sometimes, gardeners can graft scion wood from other apple trees directly on a tree that is already established in their yard. There are multiple methods of grafting. The goal is to line up the thin growing region underneath the bark of the scion and rootstock. Then wrap the union up tight and wait for mother nature to take its course. There are a few more details, but we will save those for another day.

Our little apple seeds have 60 more days in the fridge before we can plant them. So, we have to wait to see what happens. But, you don't have to wait to grow apples in your yard this summer. Make a trip to your local greenhouse this spring and purchase a ready-to-grow apple tree. Happy gardening!

DAKOTA DATEBOOK

BY MERRY HELM

Bismarck Booze Bust

April 25, 2023 — During the early years, Bismarck was right on the heels of Deadwood in lawlessness, violence and the selling of liquor. But, by the early 1900s, some Bismarck residents felt it was time to actually enforce prohibition. Saloons that carried on in secret were called “blind pigs,” and their beverages were either illegally produced locally or brought in from Canada by “runners.”

On this date in 1907, a Bismarck Tribune headline read: “Thousand Dollars Worth of Booze Found in a Cave,” because Chief Carr found an ‘Unusual Quantity’ of ‘Joyful Water’ under a hill near Fifth Street. He and Temperance Commissioner Murray found a door reinforced with iron bars, so Carr got a shovel and burrowed under it. Inside, they found a 10 x 16 room “filled to the roof with about every kind of intoxicating liquor consumed in this neck of the woods...”

Commissioner Murray posted guards, and at dawn they packed the booze into five wagons and took it to the capitol. The paper reported the cave was “the house of a thousand bottles, to say nothing of the barrels and boxes and cases and jugs and receptacles and containers and vessels and jars and other things in which the juice of the grape and the distillation of the corn is... contained.”

The next day, the paper gave a detailed inventory and reported, “...amid watering mouths and downcast eyes the stuff was taken into vaults and locked up to await the judicial verdict that shall consign it to mother earth, or send it up in vapors to lead the birds to new song and agitate the leaves of the trees with an unwonted glee.”

Otto Reimer admitted the stock was his and that he stored it there after his saloon was closed. He refused to officially claim it, though; he told officials to do what they wanted with it. So, they opened each container and tested the contents of each to determine “whether or not they were in the nature of an intoxicating liquor.” They were. The judge declared all should be destroyed.

On May 18, 1907, the Tribune reporter waxed poetic – in fact, it sounds like a eulogy:

Not a drum was heard or a funeral note as the booze to the rampart was hurried; not a toper fired a farewell shot, o’er the grave where the bottles were buried.

They burned it swiftly at 2 o’clock, when the shadows were eastward falling, and many a mourner near died from shock at the tragedy so appalling.

Hundreds of bottles of Blatz and Schlitz that made Milwaukee famous were flattened and shattered to little bits when bitterness overcame us.

Barrels of whiskey with heads in cave were rolled over hill and hollow and earth, so thirsty was drenched and laved till no one was left to swallow.

Barrels and bottles and casks and jugs were opened and gently flowing a mingled stream of stuff sought the bugs, and up from the fresh earth blowing came incense sweet as the breath of morn, or fields in the Junetime splendid when loosened spirits of rye and corn in a perfume sweet were blended.

And Oh but the sight was sweet and sad –

this pouring of free libation and Oh but the crashing was much and mad, and would tickle Carrie Nation;

for such is the stuff that is full of woe

and trouble and fret and worry and such is the cure that the stuff must know – the cure whose first name is Murray...
