WE THE PEOPLE

BY DAVID ADLER

Freedom of the Press: The Essential Foundation of Democracy”

When the U.S. Supreme Court, in Richmond Newspapers v. Virginia (1980), in the words of Justice John Paul Stevens, “squarely held that the acquisition of newsworthy matter is entitled to constitutional protection,” it was protecting under the First Amendment’s Free Press Clause the essential foundation of our democracy.

The conception of the press as a pillar of strength for a free people who mean to govern themselves is as old as the republic itself. In 1765, in his acclaimed treatise, “A Dissertation on the Canon and Feudal Law,” a youthful John Adams wrote: “Liberty cannot be preserved without a general knowledge among the people, who have a right . . . and a desire to know; but besides this, they have a right, an indisputable, unalienable, indefeasible, divine right to that most dreaded and envied kind of knowledge, I mean of the characters and conduct of their rulers.”

Adams’s insistence that the “preservation of liberty” rests on the “general knowledge of the people,” represented the earliest version of our historic understanding of Freedom of the Press as the public’s right to know. What is it that “we the people have a right to know?” Adams answered: “that most dreaded and envied kind of knowledge, I mean of the characters and conduct of their rulers.”

Adams anticipated James Madison’s eloquent defense of freedom of the press which, in combination with freedom of speech, provided the essential protection for a republican system of government. The press, he believed, must have “the right of freely examining public characters and measures.” It is only through close study and reporting on the means and measures of governmental policies, programs and actions, Madison explained, that the “sovereign people” can be sufficiently informed. Without information supplied by the press, the people, lacking knowledge, would be limited in their ability to scrutinize, critique and criticize governmental programs and actions. Without such knowledge, self-government would be but a pretense.

Critically, this historical understanding of the foundational role that freedom of the press plays in safeguarding the republic transcends political, partisan and ideological lines. Justice George Sutherland, surely one of the most conservative members of the Supreme Court, echoed the words of Adams and Madison. In a 1936 case, Justice Sutherland wrote, “The people are entitled to full information in respect of the doings or misdoings of their government; informed public opinion is the most potent of all restraints upon misgovernment.” The informing function of the press, what may be described as the checking value of the “Fourth Estate,” is indispensable to the maintenance of the republic. It has played a critical role, for example, in exposing governmental deceit in wartime — Vietnam and Iraq — and governmental efforts to suppress the truth, as seen in the Pentagon Papers Case (1971) and the Watergate Tapes Case (1974).

It is precisely because “we the people” cannot attend the seat of government — state or national — to listen to debates on the great issues of our time or attend important trials that carry great significance for our democracy and the future of the nation, that we depend upon a free and independent press to provide accurate coverage of newsworthy events. We are reminded of Madison’s fervent belief that the press must be free to “canvass the merits and measures of public men.”

The press is an indispensable representative of the people, a fourth estate. It is for this reason, as Justice Potter Stewart noted in the Pentagon Papers Case, that the press plays a vital checking role in national security matters, particularly because expansive claims of presidential power face little challenge from a quiescent Congress and a deferential judiciary. So, he wrote, “the only effective restraint upon executive policy and power . . . may lie in an enlightened citizenry — in an informed and critical public opinion. For this reason, it is perhaps here that a press that is alert, aware and free most vitally serves the purpose of the First Amendment. For without an informed and free press there cannot be an enlightened people.”

Freedom of the Press, Justice Hugo Black rightly said, was created for the governed, not the government. If an enlightened citizenry is integral to democracy, as a long line of American statesmen, from Adams and Madison to Stewart and Black, have so declared, then the press must be not only free and unfettered but dedicated, energetic and aggressive in informing the American people. Madison, who was prone to romantic musings about the press, nevertheless captured its historic importance when he wrote in 1799: “To the press alone, chequered as it is with abuses, the world is indebted for all the triumphs which have been gained by reason and humanity over error and oppression.”

Red River Valley University

BY MERRY HELM

February 5, 2024 — In his poem, “Reborn,” Bishop Ralph Spaulding Cushman wrote:

Deaf, dumb, and blind, I walked His earth,

I breathed His air, a thankless clod,

Until that blessed summer’s night

When my dead soul found life and God!*

It was on this day in 1891 that the North Dakota Methodists founded a private school in Wahpeton, the Red River Valley University. It was a school that would move several times before settling into its final phase.

Classes at Red River Valley University opened in 1893 with 85 students. From the beginning, RRVU struggled financially, so in 1905, RRVU made a historic move by affiliating with a state school, UND at Grand Forks, where it was renamed Wesley College.

Sixteen years later, Wesley College established a branch, the School of Religion, on the campus of the North Dakota Agriculture College in Fargo. Course offerings included the history, literature, philosophy and psychology of religion.

Under the directorship of Walter Lee Airheart, the School of Religion enrolled its first four students in 1921. By 1929, just eight years later, there were 253 students attending.

That winter, Airheart and 16 Fargo businessmen organized the Fargo School of Religious Education, a private corporation that proposed to provide religious education at NDAC that was non-sectarian and non-denominational. They went looking for private contributions, and in 1936, a donation from Mr. and Mrs. S. Fred Knight allowed the School to construct a new building across the street from NDAC on land leased from Wesley College.

In 1996, the building was demolished to make way for the

New Alumni Center.

Ella, the Window Smasher

BY JIM DAVIS

February 6, 2024 — According to the newspaper accounts, Ella O’Keefe appears to have been a likeable person who spent most of her time traveling from place to place on transportation furnished by local or county authorities. It appears that Ella had a problem. When despondent, she manifested her depression in a peculiar way—she smashed windows.

Ella the Window Smasher was well known in North Dakota cities and on this date in 1896, she was on her way to Moorhead courtesy of the cities of Bismarck and Jamestown. After a brief episode in Bismarck, the Burleigh County authorities decided there was a need to send her, unescorted, to Jamestown.

Her arrival in Jamestown was reported in the Jamestown Daily Alert where she “stopped in her progress up Fifth avenue and expressed an intense desire to smash the windows in the stores of Strong and Chase,” but she was prevented from doing so by parties who had accompanied her from the depot.

Hospitals have many windows and rather than being institutionalized at the state run hospital in Jamestown, Ella soon found herself on her way to Minnesota, that being the easiest and cheapest way of removing her from the community.

Upon her arrival in Fargo, Ella was arrested—as the year before she had attempted to break all the windows at the Fargo Women’s Home. After her arrest, it was learned that she had more or less escaped from an institution in Fergus Falls, thereby beginning her journey from town to town. The Fargo Police Chief secured a ticket for her to Wahpeton after she claimed that her real name was Marie O’Brien and she had a brother living at that location. After 1896 Ella drops from sight in North Dakota but one can only hope that she was able to find help.

Depression Script

BY JIM DAVIS

February 9, 2024 — With recent mortgage foreclosures in the housing market, we can perhaps more readily relate to the events that transpired in the Great Depression of the 1930s. With continual drought and low commodity prices, farmers across North Dakota were losing their farms to taxes and mortgages; but the State Legislature on this date would reintroduce an ancient practice to remedy this situation.

Alfred Dale, State Treasurer, recommended the use of script. Many farmers and merchants, lacking available cash, had already adopted forms of barter to exchange goods and services, but Mr. Dale now proposed a form of script to allow farmers to repay their loans and at the same time obtain negotiable script to purchase other items and expand the economy.

This is how it worked. The farmer would sell one thousand bushels of wheat at 35 cents a bushel, then take his check for $350 to the Bank of North Dakota to pay on his farm loan. The bank would credit the payment and then issue the farmer an additional $350 in negotiable bonds of $1, $5 and $10 values—in essence giving him 70 cents a bushel for his wheat, a form of currency inflation.

These bonds were then usable for any purchase at face value, but at each transaction, the handler affixed a stamp purchased from the Bank of North Dakota equal to 3% of the value of the bond.

After the bond has passed through thirty-four transactions, the full value of the bond has been reached and the Bank of North Dakota was out nothing, while at the same time, the farmer had met his taxes and mortgage payments.

The State Legislature adopted House Bill 265, but somewhat modified the script to Self-Liquidating Tax Certificates and revenue stamps based on the amount of unpaid taxes in each county. It was also noted that it was the patriotic duty of all public employees to accept at least 15% of their salary in self-liquidating tax certificates.

Although it was too late for many farm owners, the use of script temporarily halted tax sales and allowed thousands to remain on their farms. It would be an ironic twist for some of these individuals, since it was land script instead of homesteading that had allowed them to obtain their parcels originally.

HAIR ON FIRE

Back at it

BY JILL DENNING GACKLE

Just like Cher, I'll call it my Never Say Goodbye Tour.

I'm back. Not necessarily because there was a public clamoring. There were more crickets than clapping. Some of you probably didn't know I ever left.

If I could sing, I would have a concert to show I'm back, but instead I'll just write it.

I'm calling myself a freelance storyteller who is doing occasional stories in the McLean County Independent.

When I officially retired in March 2022 after a couple of years of being unreliable, burnt to a fiery crisp and admittedly with one foot out the door, it was time. It felt good to not have to think about sharing story ideas with an editor, coaching how best to craft an idea and keep the fires lit under everyone's feet to assure readers of a valuable product. It was definitely someone else's turn.

But as time went on, I heard of stories that I wanted to write. Although I'm busy, I missed interviewing interesting people about hobbies and passions and then turning it into stories worth telling. And hopefully worth reading.

Before approaching the Independent staff with the proposition, I already had two story ideas stuck in my head that needed to be shared. When the third one landed in my lap – "The Fly in the Buttermilk" story of the former Garrison resident, one of the first blacks in the state – I knew I couldn't ignore the nudges to pursue writing again.

Just like Cher, I can't give it up. Writing is therapeutic for me. People's stories are fascinating. It's always been interesting to me to learn what makes people do what they do and I hope you find the same.

If you have any story ideas – particularly stories of people – please let me know or Editor Tyson Matthews. We want to continue to give you what you need to know to stay engaged with your community.

And if you haven't renewed your subscription, now is the time. Your community needs a thriving newspaper and your subscription keeps staff paid and the presses running.

Only about 10 percent of a newspaper's revenue comes from subscriptions or copies sold at the counters, which makes advertising the key. If you want more pages of news, then it takes more advertising. There's nothing like a paid product – or the free shopper going to every home – to bring your message into many, many households.

Thanks for reading. And thanks for letting me start my comeback tour.

McLean County giving funds back to Mercer County for law enforcement coverage

BY KELLI AMELING, ASSOCIATE PUBLISHER

McLean County officials have unanimously agreed they would not accept a check for law enforcement coverage for Mercer County, and noted the funds should be used through the Mercer County Sheriff's Department.

During the Jan. 9 McLean County Commission meeting, Auditor Beth Knutson told commissioners the county received a check from Mercer County for law enforcement coverage of the county while Mercer County mourned the loss of one of their own deputies.

"(The county) doesn't feel right accepting the money," Knutson told commissioners.

In addition, it was noted all counties have a mutual agreement to help each other when needed.

Initially, Knutson told commissioners the discussion was to give the money to Deputy Paul Martin's family. However, due to laws, that cannot be done. So it was determined the county wanted to return the check so the Mercer County Sheriff's Department could use it within their office.

Commissioners unanimously agreed returning the check was the right thing to do and all county leaders also noted the partnership among neighbor counties for law enforcement.

"We appreciate the thought – but it is something their department can use," Knutson said.

Deputy Paul Martin, 53, of Beulah, died in the line of duty Dec. 6 after being involved in a pursuit. Martin was standing behind his patrol vehicle when the vehicle being sought struck Martin's patrol vehicle, pushing it into him.

The vehicle was being driven by Ian Cramer, 42, of Bismarck – the son of North Dakota Sen. Kevin Cramer.

While the county mourned the loss of Martin, surrounding communities came together to show support for Mercer County through numerous efforts, including the McLean County Sheriff's Department who stepped in and help with coverage during the difficult time.

Industrial Commission awards grants and loans in latest Clean Sustainable Energy Program grant round

The North Dakota Industrial Commission, consisting of Gov. Doug Burgum, Attorney General Drew Wrigley and Agriculture Commissioner Doug Goehring, is awarding grants and $153 million in loans during the latest grant round for the Clean Sustainable Energy program. The Clean Sustainable Energy Program was established in 2021 to advance the commercialization of low-emissions technologies for North Dakota's energy industry and is funded by a combination of oil tax revenue and state-owned mineral royalties.

The eight approved Clean Sustainable Energy Program projects included:

A $7 million grant to Scranton Holding Company to support a low-carbon pig iron production facility in McLean County, ND. A $2.5 million loan to Wellspring Hydro to support an oil field produced water recycling facility in Williams County, ND.

A $3.3 million grant to the Energy and Environmental Research Center and Marathon Petroleum to support the expansion and production of sustainable aviation fuels at its Dickinson, ND refinery.

A $2 million grant to Dakota Lithium for a demonstration facility producing low-carbon, long-duration lithium-ion batteries in Grand Forks, ND.

A $17 million loan to Packet Digital to support its battery manufacturing facility in Fargo, ND.

A $9.5 million grant and a $8.5 million loan to Cerilon to further support construction of a natural gas-to-liquids production facility in Williams County, ND. Additionally, the Commission accepted the recommendation of the Clean Sustainable Energy Authority (CSEA) and approved the following fertilizer projects for forgivable loans:

A $75 million loan to Prairie Horizon for a fertilizer production facility in Stark County, ND. A $50 million loan to NextEra Energy Resources for a fertilizer production facility in Stutsman County, ND. The fertilizer loan was authorized by House Bill 1546 during the November 2023 special session, which also directed the CSEA to forgive the loan "upon completion of construction of the fertilizer production facility."

The forgiven loan will be paid from the Strategic Investments and Improvement Fund, which receives its funding from oil tax revenue and royalties from state-owned minerals.

"The projects approved today represent an exciting new chapter for our state," the Commission said in a joint statement.

"By leveraging state energy tax dollars and private sector investments, we can address the rising regulatory burden that our industries face while ensuring that our energy portfolio remains resilient and reliable. We commend the Clean Sustainable Energy Authority for thoroughly vetting the many great applications we received, and we thank the applicants for their investments in North Dakota."

FROM A CERTAIN POINT OF VIEW

Everybody Loves a Hero

BY HUNTER KAMRATH

One of my best friends and I have a unique tradition. Oftentimes when we meet, we find ourselves looking for history books at Barnes and Noble. One December afternoon, I found a book on George Washington called "The Return of George Washington: Uniting the States 1783-1789" by Edward J. Larson. I was very intrigued and decided to buy it since I consider Washington to be my very favorite United States President. In honor of the fact that Presidents Day is just around the corner, I would like to focus on Washington's road to becoming our first president and why I think he is a true inspiration to us all.

I was not disappointed when I read the book. The book opens with the immediate aftermath of the Revolutionary War. An entire nation is in a state of shock as the General who led the army to fight for Independence is now retiring. It is believed that some of the many reasons for this was that Washington became rather uncomfortable as many wanted him to become king, and Washington was very against the notion of the newborn nation to be just like the nation that just was ruling over them, Great Britain. Another reason was the declining health of the founding father. It was noted in the book that he was often sick, suffering from several headaches and many toothaches, just to name a few of the health issues that were facing our future president.

Our Nation was in rough shape during the first few years of Washington's retirement. At the time, the United States' constitution was the Articles of Confederation, but it was quickly realized by the founding fathers that it could never work. Historians have come up with multiple reasons why it failed, but the simplest explanation was that the Government was too weak and unable to enforce any laws.

It was decided to write a new constitution in 1787. Each of the original 13 colonies were asked to bring delegates to a convention to draft a new constitution. To no one's surprise, the state of Virginia desperately wanted George Washington to be one of the representatives for their state. He was not very interested, wanting to continue his retirement at his home in Mount Vernon and hear about the happenings via the local newspaper and the letters he received from friends like Thomas Jefferson and James Madison. Seeing how rough of shape the young nation was in, he finally agreed to attend.

It took several long months, but a constitution would be drafted. And once again, George would go back to Mount Vernon as now it was time to hope that the states would want to ratify the constitution. After a long process, this would eventually be the case. Once again, his time away from the public spotlight wouldn't last long. The constitution called for one man to become a President of the country. As you can imagine, the country once again looked to George. Once again, he wasn't so thrilled wanting to stay retired, but eventually he was hesitantly willing to agree to run for the office, and he won all 13 states in the first presidential election easily becoming our very first president. To this day, he is still considered by many to be the best president in our country's history.

What I love about this story is how much of a hero Washington is and how inspiring this story can be. Several times he had to make sacrifices to do what he felt was right for the good of the country even though it took away from the quiet life he now desired at Mount Vernon. He easily could have become the king of the country, but he didn't. He knew the country could never thrive under that kind of government. He also could have been president until the day he died, but he knew that it wouldn't be right to hold the power of office for too long and resigned after serving two terms or eight years in the office.

"Everybody loves a hero. People line up for them. Cheer them. Scream their names. And Years later, they'll tell how they stood in the rain for hours just to get a glimpse of the one who taught them to hold on a second longer. I believe there's a hero in all of us that keeps us honest, gives us strength, makes us noble and finally allows us to die with pride. Even though sometimes we have to be steady and give up the thing we want the most, even our dreams." – Rosemary Harris as Aunt May Parker in the 2004 film "Spider-Man 2".
